ROCK ISLAND'S BABY ROCK

IS THIS THE IDEAL CARRY-SIZED .380?

By David Hunter Jones, Editor

In the world of carry and concealment, compromise is the name of the game. You want high capacity and velocity? Good luck concealing that 20+1 longslide autoloader without a Hawaiian shirt. You want the utmost in concealment? A .22 LR derringer in an ankle holster is neither handy nor potent.

Enter the Compromises.

Many armed citizens have found that the happiest medium lies in a single- or double-stack autoloader. The top caliber choices are—arguably, of course—9mm Luger, .45 ACP and .380 ACP. Because of this ever-ripening and expanding market, there are hosts of guns that fill this niche, and many do it quite well. Rock Island Armory currently has a host of guns that fit this bill, namely 9mm and .45 ACP 1911s, but they've not jumped into the .380 ACP arena until very recently with their latest offering, the M1911 A380, more commonly known as the Baby Rock.

Rock Island Armory has been selling guns in the United States for 30 years. In that time, the company's focus has been on crafting and delivering quality firearms at reasonable prices. While the company has plenty of experience with the design, they diverged a bit in function but retained the form in the Baby Rock. As the name implies, the Baby Rock is a scaled down 1911 in looks, but operationally it's a tad different.

Impressions

I first encountered this diminutive pistol this past summer at a media event where Armscor (Rock Island) was exhibiting. Besides their .22 TCM guns, .22 TCM conversion kits and full-sized 1911s, the Baby Rock caught the attention of many writers and editors. Most of the pint-sized 1911s on the market have abbreviated features that make them look like a hacked-down full-size 1911, whereas the Baby Rock looks like it was put into Wayne Szalinski's (Rick Moranis) shrinking machine from the movie "Honey, I Shrunk The Kids." Creating a slightly-larger-than-pocket-sized 1911 took some creativity and a few liberties with the functioning of the pistol. But here's a spoiler: it runs like a top.

First, some specs. The Baby Rock is 6.62 inches long, roughly the length of some full-size custom 1911s barrels. For comparison, a full-sized Dan Wesson Silverback in Despite its small size, the Baby Rock's familiar 1911 styling made it a joy to shoot. All who shot it were impressed.

The Baby Rock proved very reliable with several loads.

is necessary; most everyone ought to be able to get a full and proper strong-hand grip on this gun. The barrel is 3¾-inches long. When I grip a full-size 1911 naturally, the gun instinctively points dead on where I'm aiming, whereas the Baby Rock wants to point a little low. This is because it has a slightly steeper grip angler than that of a traditional 1911. That said, shooting it is a pleasure.

This gun is intended as a carry piece, and its design reiterates that fact. The grip heel is slightly bobbed to print less under a shirt. The mainspring housing is vertically serrated. The dovetailed windage-adjustable rear sight is what Rock Island calls a snag-free number, and it's a plain squared U notch with serrations to reduce glare. It's no more snag-free than a tiny Novak-style sight can be, though. The front post is a plain black post and is dovetailed in place. The sights are the weakest point of this gun, a trait shared with many pocket-sized handguns. Gaining a proper sight picture can be difficult given how shallow the rear sight's notch is. Either a white dot or 10mm is nearly 8¾ inches long. Granted, the Silverback is a big, heavy gun. And it needs to be to soak up the recoil that 200-plus grain 10mm loads dish out. But I mention the Silverback to compare a jumbo 1911 to the Baby Rock. The Baby Rock is 4.62 inches tall, and the Silverback is just shy of 5¾ inches. The Baby Rock is widest at its grip panels, and that measurement registers in right at 1-inch. The slide is ¾ of an inch across. The grips are tacky plastic and quite round as far as 1911 grips go, making it easy to grab, even with big hands like mine. The recoil impulse from even the hottest .380 loads (oxymoron?) is pussycat soft. The grip length is such that no silly two-finger hold

Here's the Baby Rock shown in comparison with the author's own Kel-Tec P3AT .380 pocket gun. The Rock Island offers a better grip, velocity and accuracy than the Kel-Tec, but is less concealable.

Without anything to reference the Baby Rock's size, it can be mistaken for a full-size 1911.

The forward cocking serrations were very usable and aggressive.

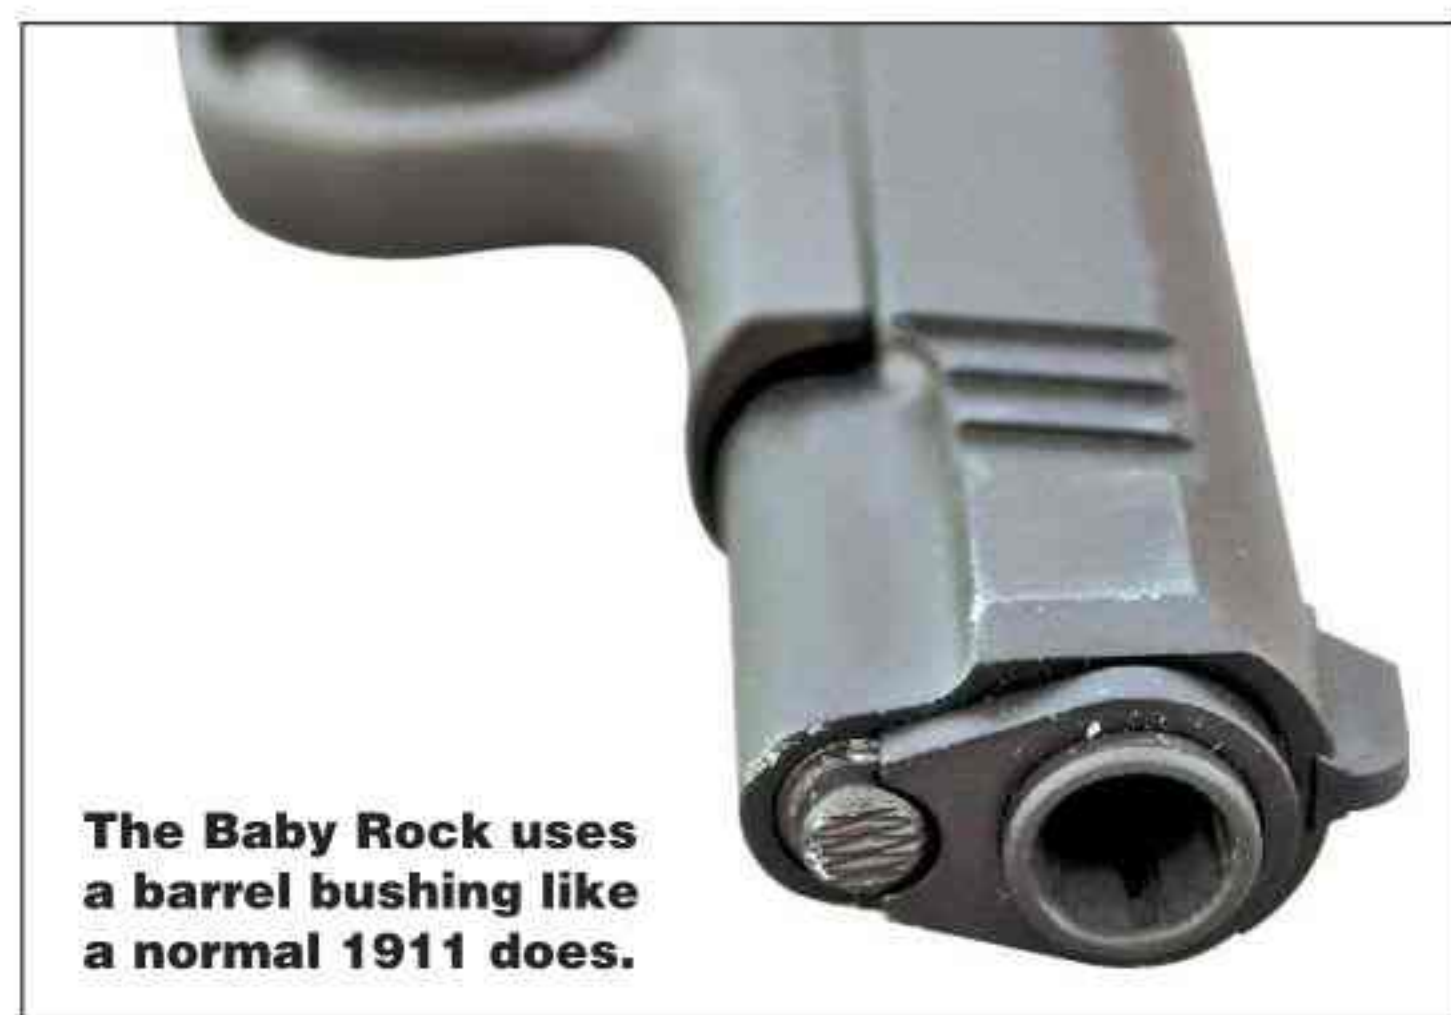

ROCK ISLAND'S BABY ROCK

The Baby Rock's barrel is 3¾-inches long and sports a polished feed ramp. It produced very acceptable accuracy.

The tiny sights were the weak point of the Baby Rock when compared to a full-sized 1911. However, when compared to other small pocket autos, they're above average.

The Baby Rock uses a barrel bushing like a normal 1911 does.

release, however, is very easily manipulated by hands of all sizes. The magazine release is also eminently usable. However, for the first 100 or so rounds the magazines didn't drop free and had to be pried out, but as the gun "broke in" they ejected nicely. Rock Island states in the included literature that there is a 500 round break-in period due to tight tolerances, and while it is fairly tight, it's no Les Baer. The extractor is an external number and proved 100% reliable in test firing. The front of the slide sports deep, aggressive cocking serrations that make press checks easy, if you should choose to check the gun's status that way. The trigger has a two holes drilled in it, almost like a skeletonized job, and is vertically serrated on the front face. Finally, the company's logo is etched into the very rear of the slide. As is standard anymore, the ejection port is lowered and flared.

The gun is constructed of 4140 ordnance steel and sports a handsome Parkerized finish on both the frame and the slide.

Inner Workings

Operation of the Baby Rock is straight blowback. Traditional 1911s have a locked breech design to deal with the pressure and recoil the .45 ACP produces. Many .380s and small-caliber guns enjoy the simpler straight blowback design because of the cartridge's lower power level. Although some still refuse to believe it, today's defensive .380 rounds are competent man-stoppers, especially when aimed accurately and sent through a 3¾-inch barrel. Due to the Baby Rock's blowback design, shooters with weaker hands might find the slide a bit tough to retract. It's not hard by any stretch and it's very smooth, but it's not as easy as a regular 1911.

With a dot or tritium insert, the front sight would become more user friendly.

A short guide rod is enveloped by a single recoil spring, and the barrel interfaces with the frame via a single large, non-moving lug. It's just wedged against the frame. However, the barrel does sport a nicely polished ideally a night sight up front would help immensely. The grip safety is small but depresses very easily and keeps the skeletonized hammer away from the web of your hand nicely. The thumb safety is difficult to work without altering your grip on the gun, but after all it is a tiny 1911. It hits between the joints on my thumb with a proper grip. It's somewhat hard to activate, but it bumps to "fire" with ease, even using the skinny part of your thumb. The slide

EXTREMELY LOW DRAG EXPANDING BULLETS WITH HEAT SHIELD™ TIP

Conventional polymer tips melt in flight!

Hornady® engineers, using Doppler radar discovered that ALL manufacturer's polymer tips are affected by aerodynamic heating – they melt and deform in flight leading to both BC and accuracy loss. To counter this effect, Hornady identified a heat resistant polymer and developed the patent pending Heat Shield™ tip. Unique in appearance, the translucent ruby red Heat Shield™ tip resists aerodynamic heating and creates the PERFECT MEPLAT (tip). Combined with its secant ogive profile, AMP® jacket and optimized boattail, the ELD-X™ bullet delivers flat trajectories, match accuracy and unparalleled lethality at ALL practical ranges.

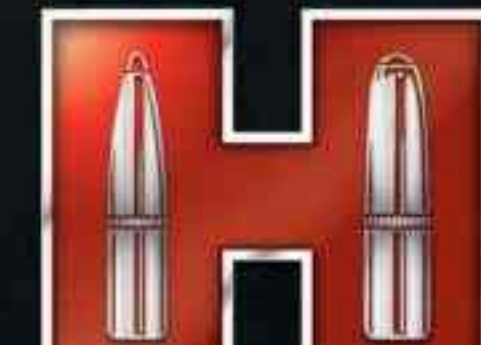

THE FIRST ALL-RANGE HUNTING BULLET - ELD-X.™

- Revolutionary patent-pending Heat Shield™ tip forms the perfect meplat.
- Doppler radar verified, best-in-class BCs over entire trajectory.
- Streamlined secant ogive, AMP® jackets and optimum boattail for match-accurate results
- InterLock® ring works to keep the core and jacket together.
- Reliable, controlled expansion delivers lethality at ALL practical distances.

Available as component bullets or in factory-loaded Precision Hunter™ ammunition.

Three Shot Burst Kit Changes Full Auto M16 to 3 Shot Burst. Includes hammer, trigger, 2 disconnectors, 2 disconnector springs, hammer spring, cam and cam spring. NFA rules apply. . . . $85

The round, rubber grips helped fill the shooter's hand nicely. They're quite comfortable, too.

The Baby Rock comes with a commander-style hammer.

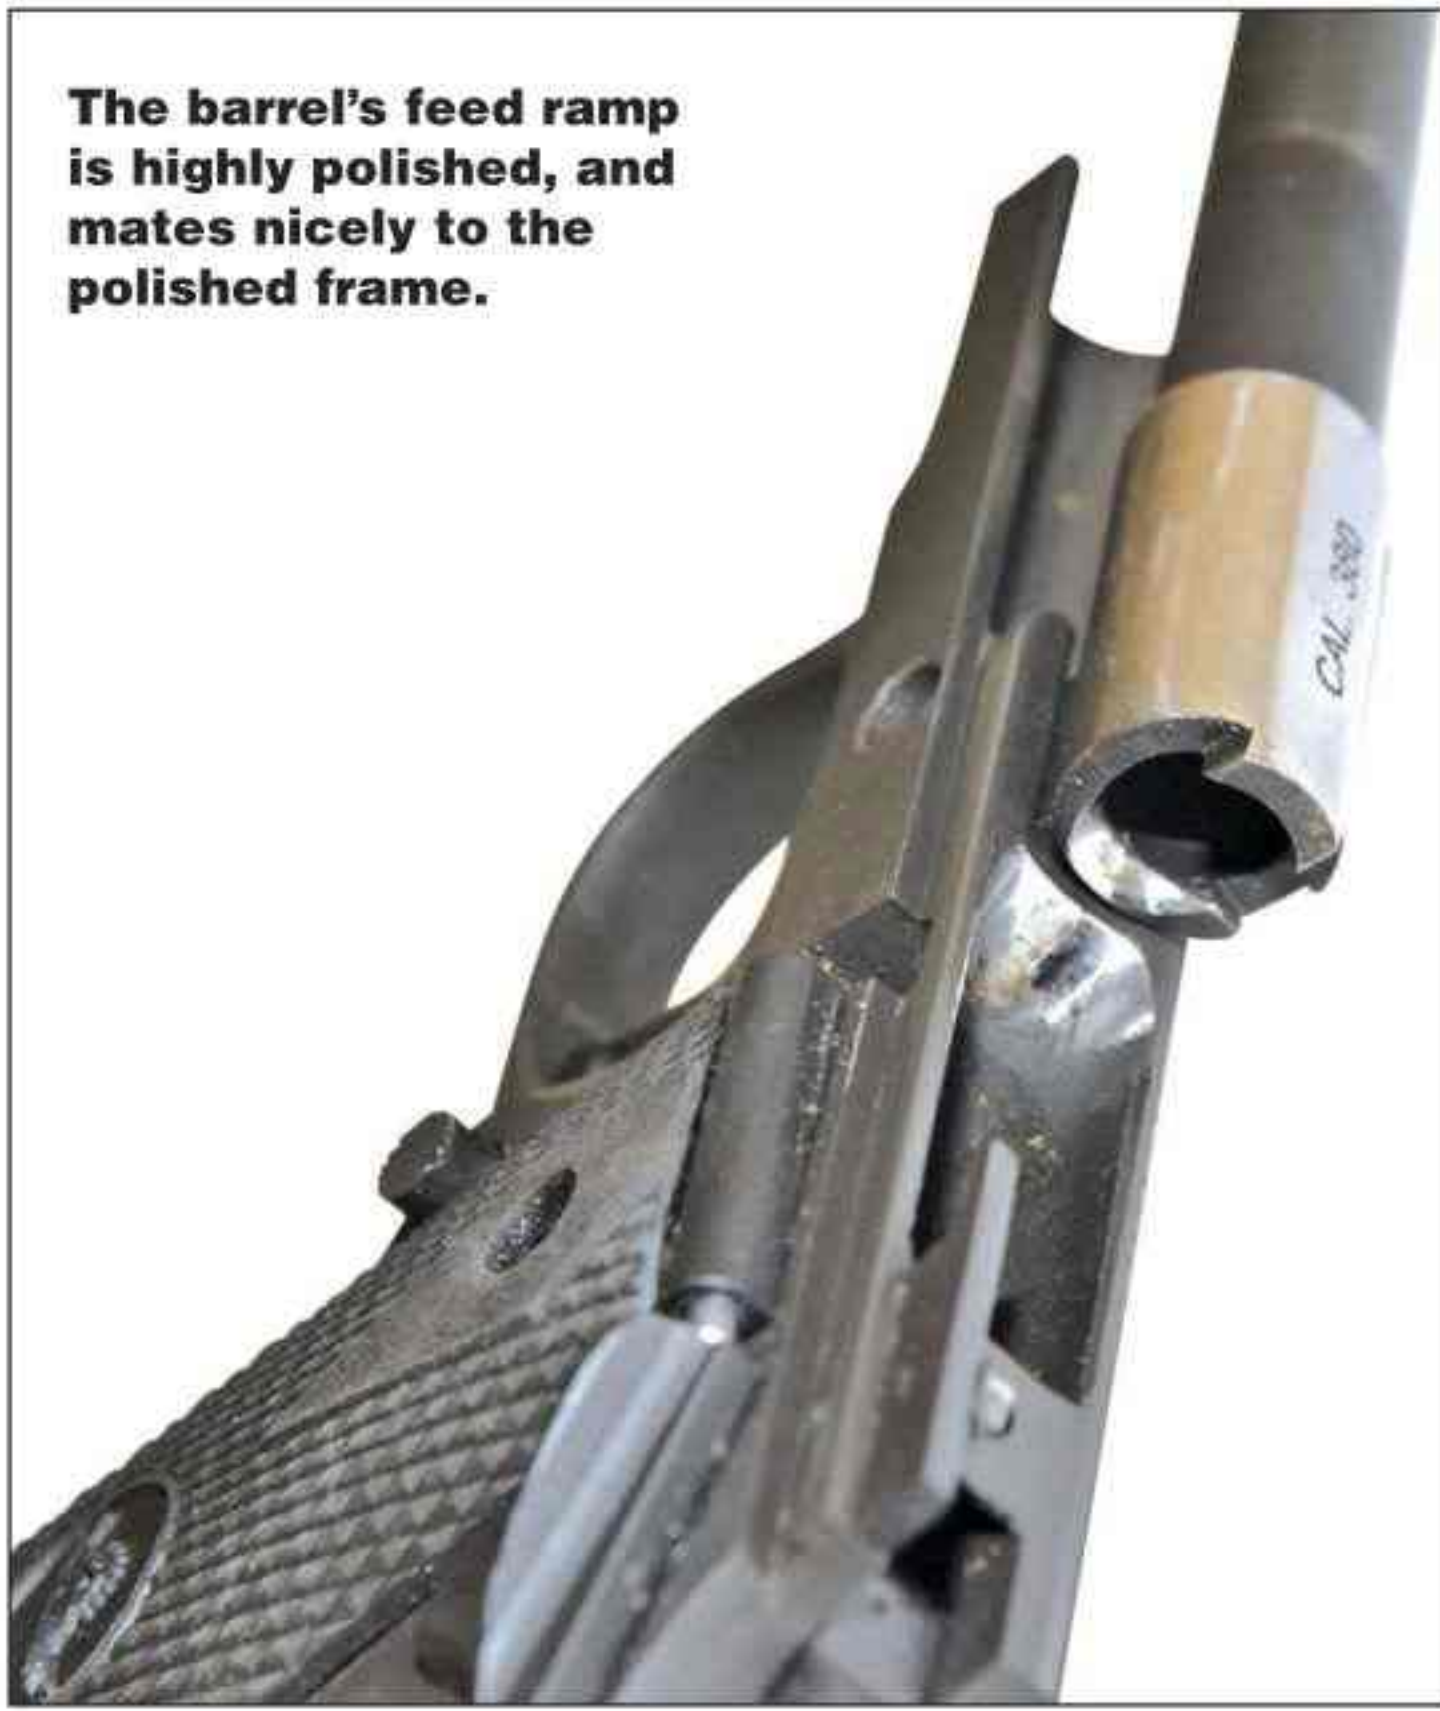

The main spring housing is bobbed slightly, which gives the Baby Rock an even smaller carry profile.

The grip safety engaged every time and the beavertail kept the hammer safely away from the shooter's hands, no matter how large they might be.

The external extractor proved 100% reliable in testing.

The barrel's feed ramp is highly polished, and mates nicely to the polished frame.

The barrel bushing, recoil spring plug recoil spring look just like regular 1911 units, just a hair smaller.

feed ramp that mates nicely with the polished ramp on the gun's frame. A fixed ejector hammers empties and sends them out of the way. The barrel bushing and recoil spring plug look right at home on a 1911, they're just small. Only the top half of the barrel is polished and is stamped "CAL .380." The barrel is a six-groove, and has a 1-in-16 twist.

To disassemble the Baby Rock, just follow standard 1911 protocols. No barrel bushing wrench is necessary.

Range Report

Speaking of firing the gun, in testing I put more than 200 rounds through it, mostly Armscor's own 95-grain FMJ load, which proved disappointingly inaccurate. However, the ambient temperature when I did my test firing was sub-freezing, and feeling the tips of my fingers was difficult. But when I ran 95-grain Gold Dots through it, I realized this little gun could shoot. The best 5-shot group I posted from 15 yards on this chilly day was less than 1½ inches. Again, I never experienced a malfunction of any sort.

The trigger has a little bit of takeup before it breaks fairly cleanly right at a touch heavier than 6 pounds, which is a little on the heavy side for a single-action straight-pull 1911 trigger.

It pointed somewhat naturally but again was a touch low when pointed instinctively. Gripping the small frame tends to leave the trigger closer to the index finger's first joint than second, but a small adjustment places the second joint right on the trigger's face. Pulling the trigger with the pad of your index finger is awkward and not easily accomplished; you almost have to curl your finger back toward you to get it on there. Just get a comfortable grip and get used to where the trigger hits your finger; the Baby Rock isn't like a lot of small double-action guns where the trigger breaks near the frame.

Now, the biggest question of all: is it a good carry gun? Well, it's got a lot going for it, and just a few strikes against. One of the cons is its weight. It's kind of heavy for its chambering and size, but this makes managing recoil a breeze. The sights are marginal at best, but there again, no one is going to mug you from 25 yards. On the upswing, the long-ish barrel means you'll be getting the most out from the .380 ACP round. It also enjoys high-than-normal capacity for small .380s. It's quite thin and concealable and would disappear under even a T-shirt. Then there's the retail price. The Baby Rock is listed at $430 on Rock Island's website, which means you'll be able to find it for less than $400 all day, and maybe even close to $350 some places. This puts it squarely in contention with many self-defense minded .380s, and much less than lots of small-frame 1911s.

Every shooter who handled and shot the gun complemented it in one way or another. One gal commented that it had a nicer trigger pull than the Kimber Solo 9mm she was fond of packing. One guy asked me if it was for sale right then and there. Besides its performance, the intangibles that this gun has are of the charts. It's a tiny 1911, and that's just plain cool.

The CZ999 Scorpion looks so similar to a SIG P226, it's difficult even for experts to distinguish between them at a glance.

ZASTAVA'S CZ999 .40 S&W A BLASTER FOR ALL BUDGETS

By Jim Grant

As someone who started seriously shooting while in college, I learned to make every cent count. Although ammo was substantially cheaper back then, budgeting for a quality pistol proved challenging. This is especially true for someone paying student loans, housing, books and food, while only working part time. As such, higher end firearms from companies like SIG Sauer may as well have been priced stratospherically like Korth revolvers—whether $1,000 or $5,000, both were equally unobtainable on my budget.

This led me on countless adventures trying out various oddball military surplus and foreign import guns in the pursuit of a perfect budget handgun; one that met every requirement for both a competition and defensive sidearm. While many of the pistols I tried out met some of these requirements, none fulfilled all. One that thoroughly impressed me though, was the Yugoslavian M57 pistol.

With clear influences from the Soviet TT-33 Tokarev sidearm of the Second World War, the 7.62x25mm Zastava M57 feels nearly indestructible. While eminently reliable, the first of these pistols to arrive were only available in 7.62x25mm. It was a great round for plinking back when surplus ammo was 1/5 the price of steel-cased 9mm, but import restrictions made 7.62x25mm much less economical later on.

However, ammo cost wasn't the only disqualifying aspect of the pistol. The miniscule sights, limited magazine capacity and limited availability of defensive ammo all contributed in proving the M57 ill suited for defensive or concealed carry use. This led me to sell the slim semi-auto in pursuit of a more practical choice.

Evidently the Yugoslavian, and later Serbian military shared my sentiment, phasing out their antiquated stock of M57 handguns in favor of the more modern CZ99 in 1989. Chambered in 9mm Parabellum, the CZ99 is a short-recoil operated, locked breech semi automatic pistol manufactured by Crvena Zastava.

With an aluminum frame and a steep slide, the CZ999 is a serious gun built for serious use.

The CZ's polymer grip panels look reminiscent of SIG Sauer's, but are actually closer in design to those found on Walther's P88.

The slide serrations are deep and effective, but the visible machining marks betray the pistol's affordable price tag.

The CZ99's slide is milled from a block of steel, while the frame is made of aluminum. The grip panels are molded from black polymer. They feature clean checkering, and are held to the frame with two pairs of grip screws.

Behind them, the backstrap has unilateral cuts running vertically along it. These provide a little extra grip in an attractive, unobtrusive way. Above it, the tang is beavertailed to both prevent slide and hammer bite and promote a higher, more effective shooting grip.

Further back, the hammer is wide and serrated for manually lowering the hammer, despite the presence of a decocking lever. On the other end of the firearm, the enlarged trigger guard is squared off with horizontal serrations for the shooter's support hand index finger.

This leads me to my first gripe about the gun: the dust cover. Not that it doesn't serve its role well, but it lacks a feature many shooters take for granted on modern pistols: an accessory rail. While not a must, shooters looking to run a tactical light or laser will have to pay a gunsmith to install a rail first. Not a deal breaker, but something to keep in mind.

On paper, the CZ99 sounds like a winner, and given the low cost and high build quality of the M57, I had hoped to see some of these CZ99 pistols arrive stateside. It took some years, but Zastava Arms finally brought them to the United States, albeit under a different name with a modified design: the CZ999 Scorpion.

Zastava altered a few key aspects of the original CZ99 when producing the new CZ999 to better appeal to American consumers. Where the previous model was only available in the NATO standard 9mm parabellum, the CZ999 or Three Nines as it's called in Serbia, comes in both 9mm, and .40 S&W.

Despite the 'CZ' portion of its name, the CZ999 Scorpion is not related to the Česká zbrojovka Uherský Brod of the Czech Republic. Although both companies manufacture military small arms for their respective countries, both make a firearm bearing the desert-dwelling arachnid's name. While the Three Nines bears a striking resemblance to the SIG P226/228 series of handguns, it is actually based on the Walther P88. Given the limited production

ZASTAVA PAP M85 .223 AK

In theory, the concept of an AK-style carbine chambered in .223 seems golden. Who wouldn't want an ultra reliable firearm chambered in a ubiquitous cartridge? Also, given the increasing scarcity of surplus 5.45x39mm ammunition and subsequently rising prices, the concept begins to look more and more attractive.

The problem with an AK in that caliber is the availability and cost of magazines. Whereas both the 5.45 and 7.62x39mm versions of the AK have been, and continue to be fielded by dozens of countries, the .223 version isn't nearly as prolific. Worse yet, the magazine type isn't even standardized. Norinco magazines from the first batch of .223 Rem AK sporters don't necessarily fit modern versions, and there are even variations in those.

The logical solution to this conundrum is to employ a standard, common magazine. The only issue? The most common type is the STANAG. This is the same type of magazine used in NATO forces, as well as all M16s and AR15 rifles, carbines and pistols chambered in 5.56/.223.

So what?

The geometry of the magazine well of an AR-15 is substantially different than that of an AK carbine. Also, the folded steel receiver of an AK would be extremely difficult to redesign to incorporate an AR-15-type magazine well.

A milled AK-47 receiver would be simpler to modify, but also much heavier and more expensive than an AKM-type one. So when Century Arms started importing a new Serbian N-PAP pistol that was not only chambered in 5.56mm, but also used STANAG mags, I had to find out more.

Enter the Zastava Arms PAP M85 NP.

The M85 NP is a long-stroke, gas piston-driven, rotating bolt semi-automatic pistol chambered in 5.56x45mm. It feeds from any STANAG AR-15 magazine, and includes two 30-round, Magpul PMAG30 30-round magazines in the box. The way the M85 achieves this is ingenious.

Rather than modify the entire design or rebuild it on a special milled receiver, Zastava Arms instead attaches a polymer magwell extension under the receiver. It features prominent reinforcing ribs as well as an AR-15-style push-button magazine release. While further from the shooting grip than on an actual AR-15, it is still easier and faster to actuate than the traditional AK release latch.

This magazine extension is held in place by two simple, time-tested methods. On traditional AK-type firearms, the front of the trigger guard is integral to the magazine release latch assembly. The entire thing is held in place by six heavy rivets, providing a rock-solid mounting solution.

The M85 NP removes the latch, but utilizes the same mounting rivets to secure the back of the magazine well extension inside the old magazine well on the bottom of the receiver. Meanwhile, the front of the magazine well extension lands in the gap between the barrel trunnion and the receiver wall. It appears that Zastava did all this by making minor modifications to existing N-PAP components, keeping costs down.

Despite their affordable price points, this isn't a recurring theme on Serbian or Yugoslavian AKs, which are known for their durability. This is because the walls of both Yugoslavian and Serbian firearms are 1.5mm thick. Given, 1.5mm of anything doesn't sound robust, but traditional AKM carbine receivers are only 1mm thick.

This has three major effects on the PAP. It's somewhat heavier than Russian-pattern firearms, enjoys increased durability and compatibility with many standard AKM accessories. Thankfully, import aftermarket support remains. Things like magazines, pistol grips and to an extent, scope mounts. Although the M85 uses AR-15 magazines and doesn't feature a scope rail, those don't apply.

Firearms coming out of Zastava have a rich history of military service and departing from standard designs. While the PAP resembles an AKM pistol, it can't readily use >>> and prohibitive retail price of the Walther P88, you'd be forgiven for having never heard of it.

One interesting note on the P88: it was Walther's entry into the XM9 pistol trials that saw the venerable Colt M1911A1 replaced with a Beretta M9 in U.S. military service. Walther's entry was hurried and lacked a proprietary magazine, using a slightly modified Beretta mag instead. This is a design characteristic that is still present on the CZ999 derived from it.

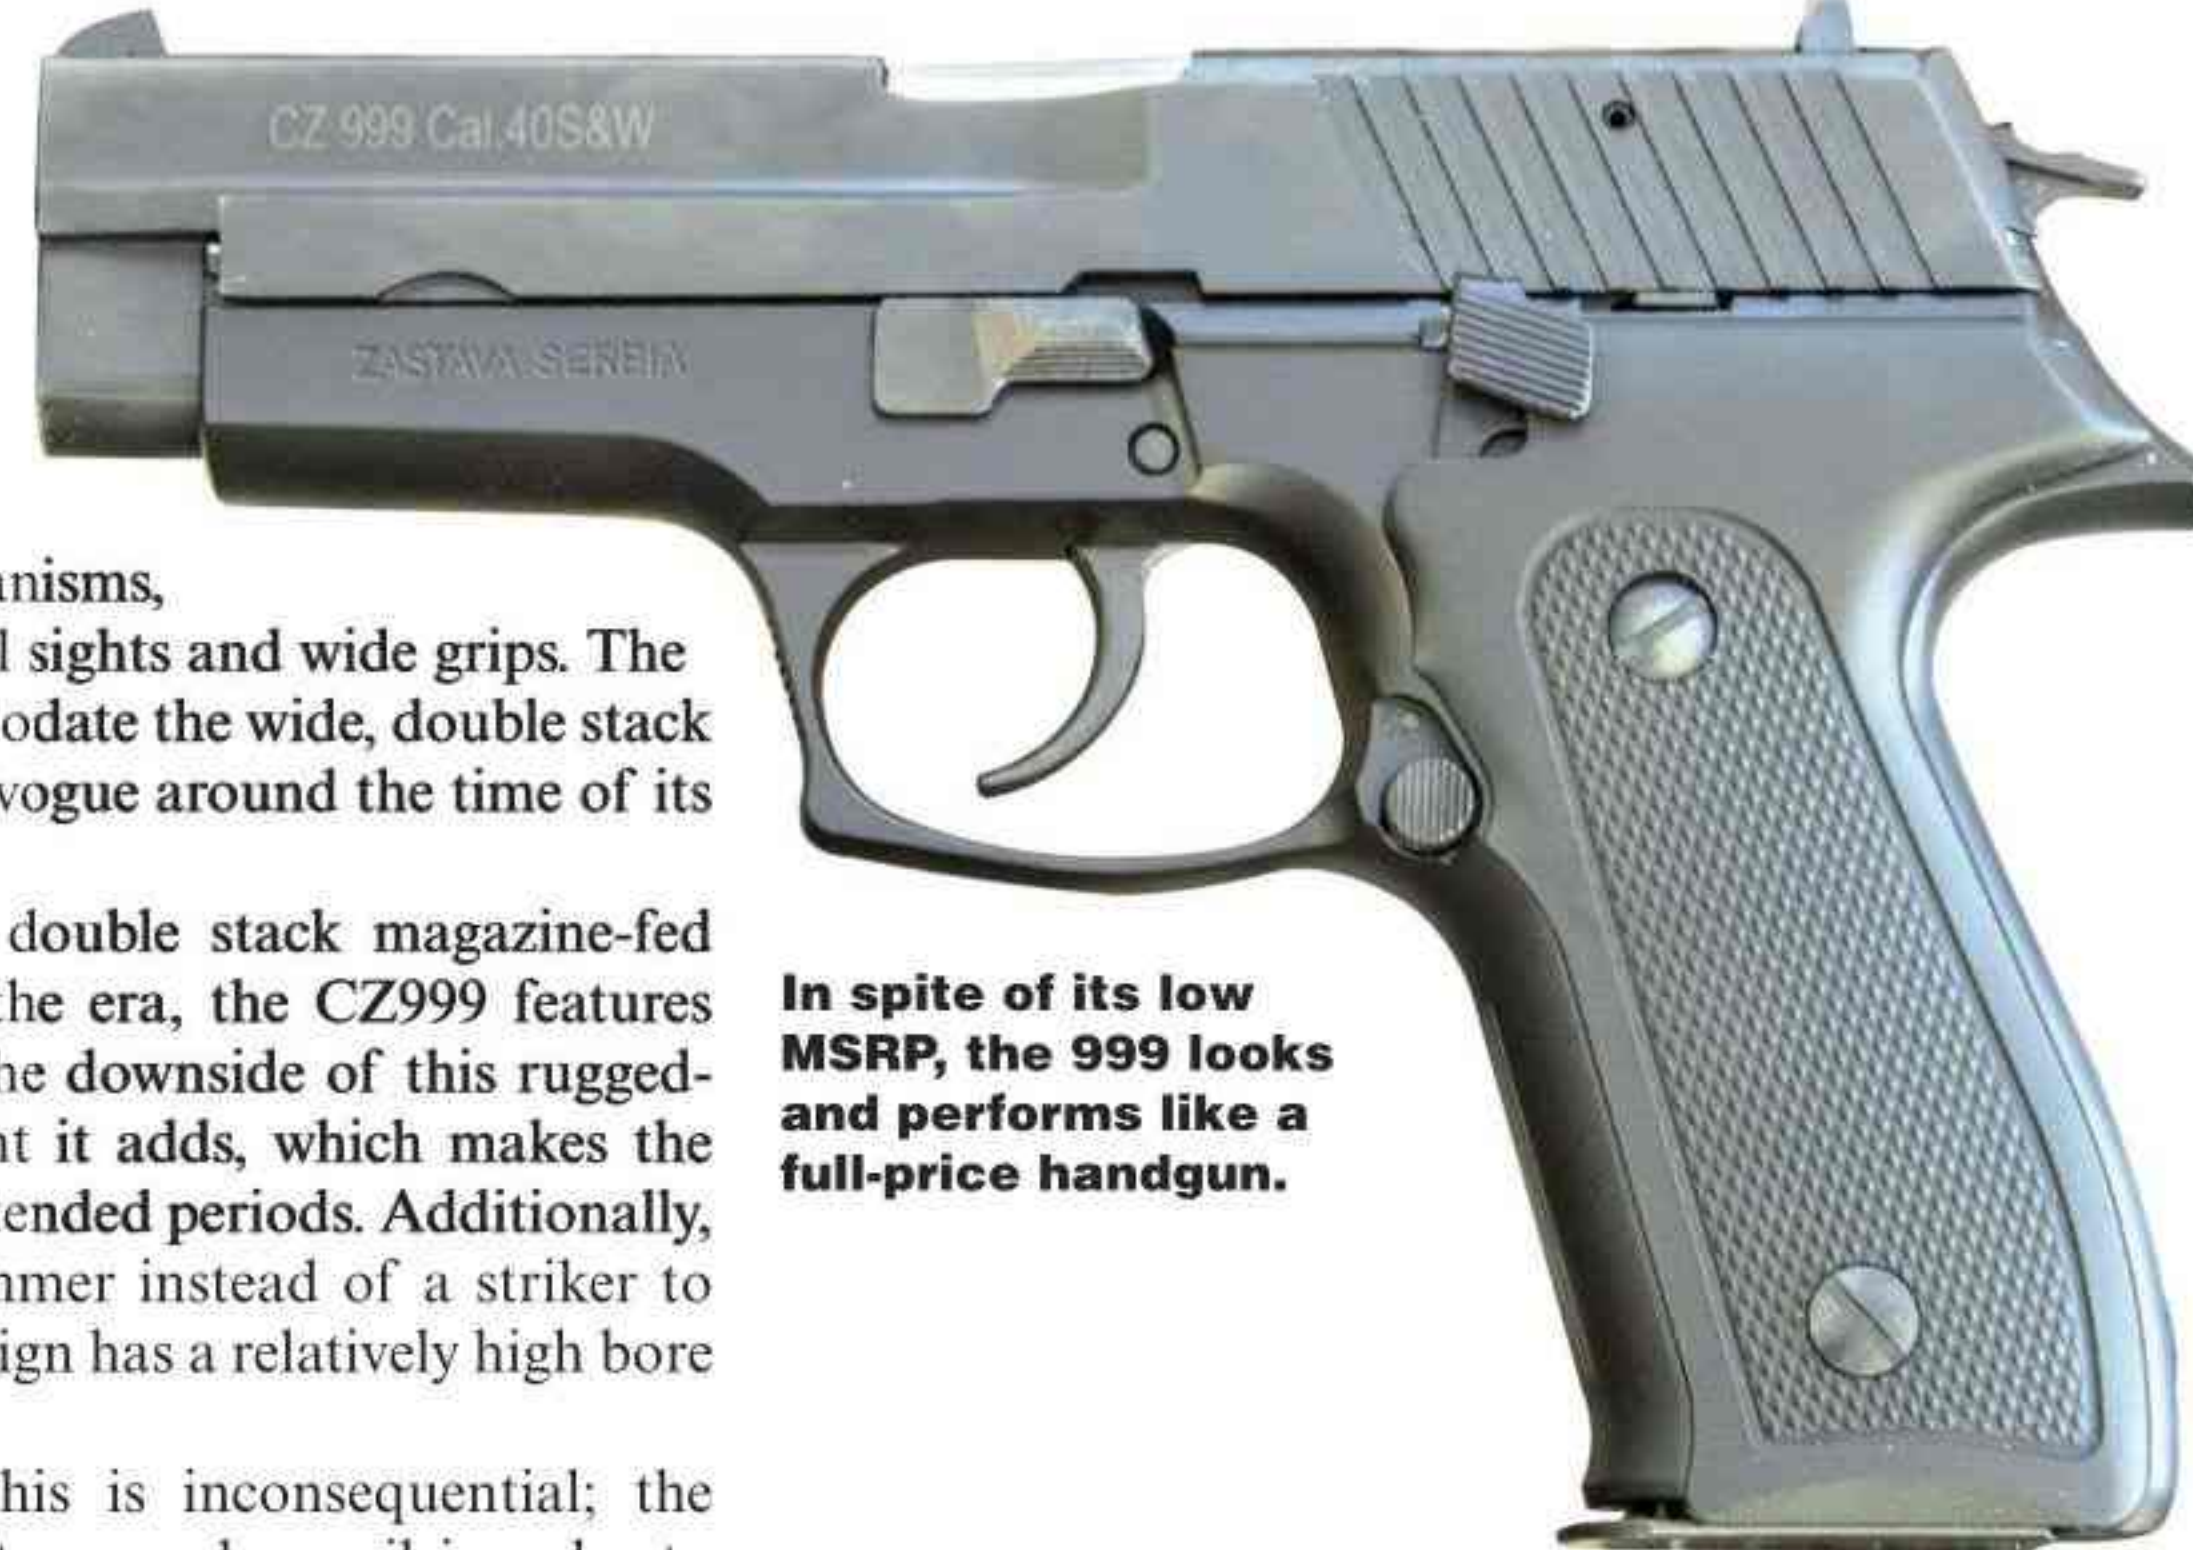

Despite the CZ portion of its name, the Three Nines is made in Serbia, not the Czech Republic

Just as the Walther was heavily influenced by the trend of all-metal wonder nines of the time, the Serb CZ pistols share many of these common design elements. Features like double, single action trigger mechanisms, exposed hammers, fixed steel sights and wide grips. The latter of which is to accommodate the wide, double stack magazines just coming into vogue around the time of its progenitor's development.

Like many of the early double stack magazine-fed 9mm semi-auto pistols of the era, the CZ999 features very robust construction. The downside of this ruggedness is the additional weight it adds, which makes the pistol painful to carry for extended periods. Additionally, since the CZ999 uses a hammer instead of a striker to impact the firing pin, the design has a relatively high bore axis, increasing felt recoil.

On the 9mm versions this is inconsequential; the 9mm cartridge doesn't create enough recoil impulse to approach anything above what most would consider mild in a full-sized, all-metal handgun. Despite the gun's 32.75 oz. heft, recoil is quite snappy since the Scorpion reviewed isn't chambered in 9mm, but rather .40 S&W.

In all fairness, the same could be said of any hammer-fired, high-bore-axis pistol chambered in .40 S&W.—

In spite of its low MSRP, the 999 looks and performs like a full-price handgun.

even one of my favorite classic handguns, the SIG P226. The recoil isn't punishing, but certainly isn't enjoyable either.

Truthfully, it's disappointing that the CZ999 isn't a SIG clone. A modern handgun that utilizes the massive >>> many of the same accessories. This isn't always a bad thing. Many of the aspects that set the PAP apart from similar Soviet designs are objectively upgrades.

This isn't limited to simple increased receiver thickness either. The pistol grip used on M85 isn't AKM standard, but many shooters prefer its wider back strap, molded horizontal checkering and added groove for right-handed shooter's thumbs. Even users with smaller hands find the grip more comfortable than standard ones, allowing them to more easily press the trigger correctly.

Two additional upgrades include the beefed-up barrel trunnion, which both adds increased durability and increased longevity, as well as the simple bolt hold open modification to the selector lever. This became a popular do-it-yourself mod for several Saiga shotguns and carbines back in their heyday. Basically, a small notch is cut in the fire selector lever that captures the charging handle when flipped up. It's a simple thing to add at home, and a welcomed addition nevertheless.

One portion of the PAP's design that many AK enthusiasts aren't thrilled with is the bolt and carrier group. Most military firearms utilize some sort of finish to prevent corrosion from either moisture or corrosive ammunition, but the PAP's bolt and carrier are simply stainless steel.

The M85 uses AR15 STANAG magazines, greatly lowering the cost of ownership

While this looks very attractive, it does an inferior job of resisting corrosion compared to common military firearm finishes like Parkerizing. It's arguable this is a cause for concern for 7.62x39mm versions, because corrosive 7.62x39mm ammo still exists. Non-corrosive 5.56x45mm ammunition makes the lack of a thick outer finish more academic and aesthetic than practical.

One of the reasons the M85 lacks an optics rail is due to the type of rear sight it employs. Unlike AKMs that feature a leaf type adjustable rear sight notch, the PAP utilizes a simplified version. This simple flip sight features two different distance settings, one for 200 meters, the other for 400. Both are designated with a white number "2" or "4" accordingly.

The shorter-range 200-meter setting also features a pair of white dots for faster sight picture acquisition. The rotating notches are protected by a pair of heavy-duty wings welded to the dust cover. In general, mounting anything to an AK dust cover is a recipe for disaster, it holds zero worse than the notorious Enfield No.5 Jungle Carbine.

The Zastava M85 solves this dilemma by using a hinged dust cover, providing vastly increased stability and repeatability to anything mounted on the cover. Shooters familiar with the Russian AKs-74u, or "Krnikov" will immediately recognize this configuration. Though unlike true Russian Krnikov sights, the M85 lacks the red Cyrillic "II", designating the point-blank range battle setting.

aftermarket parts selection of a common, proven handgun including its magazines, would make the CZ incredibly attractive. Especially given its inexpensive retail price.

Despite this, the CZ999 can't readily use any parts designed for the SIG P-series of handguns or the Walther P88. History buffs and AK lovers could divine the origin of the pistol from the previous sentence alone.

Yugoslavia has such a rich history of influenced designs and parts incompatibility; one could imagine it was a design requirement for any new Yugo/Serb military small arm. From the nation's first post-war rifle, the M48 to the more recent M70/NPAP rifles, Yugoslavian firearms often share just enough in common with other designs to frustrate armorers and tinkers alike.

With the nation's long-arm development, many of these differences can be forgiven. Many avtomat Kalashnikova aficionados consider them improvements to the AKM's design. However, the CZ999 doesn't follow the same development cycle.

The CZ999 is a domestically produced, proprietary (if highly derived) design heavily influenced by an uncommon design, the Walther P88. As such, the amount of real world data on the gun is limited compared to pistols like the M9 or Glock 17, which benefit from millions of dollars of R&D and decades of combat experience.

Presumably the handgun has gone through rigorous testing before being adopted by a major military, but to what extent is difficult to ascertain. The only thing shooters can know for certain is that the CZ999 is less expensive to produce than the TT-33 inspired M57.

Does this make the pistol ineffective, or a poor choice? Not necessarily.

The problem with a company trying to sell a proprietary design like the CZ999 isn't just the limited information on it, but also how saturated the market currently is. With the Equipped with a Century stabilizing brace, the Serbian AK pistol elevates itself from range toy to serious tool.

>>> Even still, it seems the M85 is heavily influenced by the diminutive 74U Soviet lead-slinger. Not simply because of the shortened, hinged rear sight but also the conical flash hider. Sadly, unlike a true AKS-74U, the M85 lacks a folding stock and the unique rear trunnion required to mount one.

However, shooters looking to either build a carbine or SBR from the M85 are in luck. The M92, the 7.62x39mm version of the same pistol, has proven very popular, generating a thriving 922r compliance parts and accessories market. This is especially good news for shooters who want to replace the flash hider with something else. Because, unlike AKM or AK-74 rifles, the M85 PAP uses its own proprietary tread pitch—M26x1.5 left hand.

Like all Mil-Spec AKs, the front sight tower features a spring-loaded plunger that retains and prevents any muzzle device from walking itself off. This is a really simple, yet effective method and one that I wish more firearms and suppressors utilized.

Behind this, the PAP ships with wooden handguards that distinguish themselves from AKM pattern ones with the addition of a third ventilation slot. Like all PAP firearms, these lack the high-gloss polyurethane or shellac finish found on older rifles. Instead, it features a light oil staining—one that feels thirsty for more oil.

Shooters who want something else have several options available. They can either stain and finish the included handguards, or purchase polymer or aluminum railed alternatives. The latter of which allows shooters to mount forward optics like reflex sights or long-eye-relief scout scopes.

Either one will help the shooter squeeze some additional precision from the platform, which proved surprisingly accurate given its relatively short 10-inch barrel. Various grain bullets were tested ranging from 55-grain military FMJ to 77-grain Hornady match ammo, with promising results.

The M85 predictably showed a distinct preference for military 55- and 62-grain ammo over heavier match-grade varieties. When fired from a bench rest with iron sights at 50 yards, the PAP achieved sub four-inch groups with Federal M193 rounds. I believe this group could be shrunk further with the addition of a magnified optic, since the short sight radius of the PAP makes precision work difficult.

In a vastly less scientific test, several shooters took turns firing the PAP from three different stances. They tried holding the large handgun like a revolver, adopting a Weaver stance, from the hip at close range, and with the aid of a Century Arms pistol brace.

All testers said firing from the hip was the most enjoyable way to shoot, but also the least accurate. The Weaver method also wasn't terribly effective due to the pistol's hefty 6.4-pound weight. All shooters polled enjoyed using the brace, with many remarking that it drastically reduced shooter fatigue compared to firing unsupported. One point of note, heavy-set testers noted that the brace's rubber material would chafe their skin after prolonged use, though this is likely because the brace wasn't designed for individuals of their size.

Personally, the M85 optimizes what a fun gun should be. It's not necessarily practical, but undeniably enjoyable. As someone who runs a great deal of ammo through Kalashnikov and AR-15 rifles, the ergonomics and manual of arms were immediately familiar, quickly becoming second nature. Though the odd combination of AR-15 and AKM controls often saw me adopting the wrong actions when reloading under pressure.

This was further complicated by the fact that certain magazines didn't drop free when empty. As such, I ran every single type of magazine at my disposal through the Zastava PAP to check for compatibility.

Every magazine tested successfully locked up and properly fed ammunition to the M85 except for one. The one variety that failed was Vietnam-era, 20-round straight magazines. New production Brownells 20-rounders worked better, but required more effort to insert than any other type.

As far as dropping free, polymer magazines tended to work better, with Lancer L5 Warfighter magazines being the easiest to both insert and extract. The next most compatible polymer magazine was the C Products, 100-round Beta magazine. Though I suspect the ease of extraction had more to do with the magazine's weight.

Century didn't cut any corners with the included magazines, offering the industry standard for reliability and durability: the Magpul PMAG30.

FN

The three-dot post and notch sights on the CZ999 are durable, easy to use and adjustable for windage.

addition of Ruger's recently announced American Pistol, shooters now have their pick of any number of affordable, reliable lightweight polymer pistols from all of the most prolific gunmakers from around the globe.

For the CZ999 to have a snowball's chance in hell of success, it needs to be one or both of two things. It must be revolutionary in design—enough so that previous generation handguns are wholly outclassed, or it must be incredibly affordable.

Given its derivative design, the former doesn't apply. This gun is still a child of the era of Wonder Nines. Even if shooters manage to somehow ignore the improvements in pistol ergonomics since then, the advantages of using polymer as a frame material cannot be so easily dismissed. The CZ999 does have one ace up its sleeve: a price tag less than the cost of a police trade in.

This is the pistol's saving grace. If priced around the $699 mark, the CZ999 would still be a great value on its own, but would be a tough sale against more proven designs. This is a common hurdle for new products, and one that both SIG's P-series and Springfield's XD initially faced.

Where the 999 truly shines is in offering a high quality pistol for an affordable price. The MSRP is a little over $500, but the gun is often found on sale in the mid-$300 range. At that price, a shooter can easily rationalize a robust, new production Mil-Spec pistol—but only if it performs.

In testing, the CZ999 encountered no malfunctions with FMJ ammo, but defensive hollow point rounds would occasionally snag on the feed ramp and prevent the action from fully closing. These issues cleared up after the initial 100-round break in, with the pistol encountering only three additional ammunition-related malfunctions across 400 rounds fired.

The trigger feels surprisingly good for a military pistol, despite registering 7.7 pounds in double action and 3.1 pounds in single. Overtravel is minimal, and the reset is appropriately short. This went a long way to promote accuracy from the Serbian sidearm.

Firing from a sandbag at 25 yards, the CZ999 achieved groups under 3 inches with every ammunition type tested. While not on par with purpose-built target pistols, the CZ is more than capable of holding its own in both competition or home defense scenarios.

The sights are three-dot, standard post and notch, and are dovetailed into the slide. This is great news for shooters who prefer different or adjustable sights and a welcomed addition on any service pistol.

Acquiring and engaging targets with these sights is easy during the day, although the pistol could benefit from either a tritium or fiber optic front sight post for low light use. The rear has a pronounced front edge slightly beveled to prevent snagging when drawn from a holster, while still being large enough to rack on a shooter's belt in an emergency.

Beneath the rear sight, the slide features wide serrations typical on modern military sidearms. A closer look at them reveals how the CZ999 keeps its price so low. Inside the serration grooves, the material shows clear tooling marks, indicating that it wasn't finely polished after cutting. This in no way affects function, and thanks to the matte finish is difficult to notice for all but the most keen-eyed shooters.

Below these serrations, the CZ999 begins to show its Walther roots. Like the Walther P88, the CZ999 features an ambidextrous decocking lever that doubles as a slide release. It also uses grip panels not dissimilar to Walther's. Another Walther design carry over, as mentioned before, is the magazine's design. Clearly based on that of the Beretta 92 series, shooters can modify these mags for the CZ by cutting a new retention notch, but only on the 9mm version. The Beretta 40 S&W magazines tested required additional fitting.

One aspect of aftermarket support that came as a tremendous relief is the pistol's ability to fit inside SIG P228 holsters. This effectively opens up a huge amount of options for CZ999 owners looking to tote this hefty blaster.

The ergonomics on the gun are great if you have large hands, and frustrating if you don't. The wide grip does a great job of spreading the recoil impulse across the shooter's palm, but also makes manipulating the slide release/decocker difficult without shifting the shooting grip. Thankfully this isn't the case with the ambidextrous magazine release button, which projects enough to be easily accessible.

It may not be the most modern, or lightest pistol on the market, but the CZ999 fills a niche for shooters who want a hammer-fired, all-metal service handgun for less than $400. With solid reliability, good accuracy and a respectable trigger, shooters shouldn't feel undergunned while carrying one.

BIG IRON

BUILDING THE LONGSLIDE .45 AUTO

*"There was forty feet between them when they stopped to make their play
And the swiftness of the ranger is still talked about today
Texas Red had not cleared leather fore a bullet fairly ripped
And the ranger's aim was deadly with the big iron on his hip Big iron on his hip"*

By Gus Norcross

From "BIG IRON" by Marty Robbins

OK, so Mr. Robbins was most likely not referring to a 1911 pistol when he referenced the big iron in his classic song. I get it. But, every time I start thinking about longslide 1911s that song pops into my head.

Properly constructed, a 1911 can deliver phenomenal accuracy. Bred for combat and refined by custom gunsmiths for more than a half century, you won't find many pistol competitions that aren't dominated by old slab-sides. So, if you're a 1911aholic like me and you already have a bushel basket of Government models in various flavors what do you add to the collection next? How about a long slide target model?

But, you say, those are hideously expensive custom guns. Out of the price range of blue collar dudes. Heinie, Nighthawk and Wilson big irons run $3,000 to $5,000. What to do? Build your own, of course. You'll need some parts and tools (or someone with tools who will loan them to you) and probably some expert assistance along the way but it's not that difficult.

Base Gun

Generally, customers I deal with who desire a long slide pistol already have a 5-inch 1911 and we build a 6-inch slide assembly for their existing frame. The gun I used as a demo for this article is a customer-supplied G.I.-style Rock Island Armory 5-inch model produced by The Arms Corporation of the Philippines (Armcor). Lou, my customer, desired a long slide target pistol and he had a spare RIA gun on hand we could use as a chassis.

Parts

The first step in a project like this is gathering parts. I purchased the long carbon steel slide from Caspian Arms (www.caspianarms.com) in Wolcott, Vt. Machined from barstock and hardened to RC40, it arrived in the white with a Novak front sight dovetail and classic Colt style vertical serrations at the rear. I ordered it with no rear sight cut because I prefer to machine my own a bit higher than the standard low mount. However, for the hobbyist who doesn't have access to a milling machine Caspian slides can be purchased with the rear (Bo-Mar) sight cut already machined for an extra $60. That's a deal.

Our Rock Island Armory base gun in its original form along with the 6-inch Caspian slide and Kart barrel.

The barrel I selected is a 6-inch Kart gunsmith fit model I purchased from Brownell's (472-021-045). Kart barrels are machined from forgings with a highly polished bore that is great for the lead bullets many bullseye competitors employ in their handloads. The gunsmith-fit models are supplied with an oversized hood (width and length) and oversized bottom lug. The fit of the bottom lug to the slide stop is critical for best accuracy and special tools are required for best results. If you lack machine tools, a hand-driven Brownell's lug cutter (080-000-068) will work. I used one for years before I owned a mill. You might be able to find a drop-in style 6-inch barrel, but be advised it is unlikely a barrel that is pre-fitted to generic tolerances will provide the best accuracy obtainable from your pistol.

We purchased a .225" high Novak plain black front sight from Brownell's (662-000-013). I chose Novak because they offer a wide variety of front sights that fit the same .330" x 65 degree dovetail so if Lou gets bored with plain black we have the option of swapping it out for a gold bead, white dot, tritium dot or a fiber optic model. Most serious target shooters prefer the plain black post. This one might be a bit high but if it is we'll just mill it down until we get the zero we want.

The rear sight will be Ed Brown's copy of the original Bo-Mar adjustable sight. Bo-Mar sights graced the slides of 1911s for many years but the company closed its doors leaving pistolsmiths temporarily without quality adjustable rear sights. Into the breech stepped Ed Brown. His copy of the Bo-Mar is probably better than the original, made in USA and reasonably priced. Beware of cheap, imported copies. Trust me on this.

Assembly

The first step is to test fit the Caspian slide to the stripped RIA frame. Caspian slide rails are on the large side of the tolerance range and often require lapping, but I was pleasantly surprised this one slid right in place with virtually no horizontal or vertical play. Nice!

Normally, you'd think fitting the barrel would be the next step, but you would be wrong. Experience dictates that machining the slide for sights should be done next. The reason for this is the slim possibility of a mishap on the milling machine. Let's say you've fitted your barrel and you are machining the dovetails for the sights as a last step before final assembly. Whoops! The slide moves in the vise while a cutter is engaged and puts a nice gouge in it or the dovetail is diagonal because the head on your mill/drill isn't tightened down sufficiently. You've bought a slide. If you've already fitted the barrel you may own it also. Replacing a slide is in the $200-$300 range. Add another $200 for a barrel. Stuff happens. Thinking things through ahead of time and will save you dough in the long run.

If you bought your Caspian slide with the sight cuts you can skip this section. The Bo-mar cut for the Ed

Brown adjustable sight is done in four steps. First, we begin our primary cut one inch back from the breech face and mill down the rear of the slide to create a flat for the sight base. Traditionally, the depth for this cut is around .100" because most factory slides already have a dovetail for a fixed rear sight and material is removed down to the bottom of the existing sight cut. Our Caspian slide was ordered without a rear dovetail so we could position the sight a little higher with a corresponding higher front sight. Target pistols should have sights that are highly visible. My final cut was .088" hoping that a front sight height over .200" would give us a good zero. We'll see how it works out later. The second step is cutting the dovetail using a .359 x 60 degree dovetail cutter (Brownell's 080-621-060). The cutter is slightly undersized so some hand fitting will be required for a good press fit. When fitting the sight base remove material from the sight itself rather than the slide. The golden rule of gunsmithing is ALWAYS REMOVE MATERIAL FROM THE CHEAPEST PART. If you screw it up the sight only costs $60 compared to over $250 for the slide. Get my point?

The last rear sight milling operation is the pocket at the very rear of the slide for the blade. You can use a square cutter for this operation but I had a 3/16" radius ground on a 1/2" carbide end mill specifically for this job so the radius at the front of the pocket matches the front bottom corner of the sight.

With the rear sight mounted and centered, we drill the elevation screw hole. When milling the cuts for the sight base, the slide was level in the mill vise but for drilling the elevation screw hole it should be slightly muzzle high so the sight leaf is level and the elevation screw won't bind. Center a #21 short screw machine drill in the hole where the elevation screw normally lives and spot the slide through that hole. Now chuck up a #31 drill and run it down all the way through the top of the firing pin tunnel. Tap this hole with a high quality 6-48 gun tap (carefully). Blow all the chips out of the tapped hole and deburr the firing pin tunnel as necessary before you install the screw.

The Novak front sight cut only required final fitting to install the front sight. Novak sights are pinned with a roll pin through the slide but we won't pin this one until after the pistol is zeroed.

We now move on to the heart of the matter: barrel fitting. We'll need the stripped frame, the barrel, a working barrel bushing that fits loose enough we can install/remove it without a wrench and the slide stop.

The first barrel fitting step is the hood. Our Kart barrel hood will be oversized in both width and length so it can be fitted precisely to any slide. First, the width. The slot in our Caspian slide above the breech face measures .439" and the width of the Kart hood is .453". Add .003" clearance to each side and we will need to remove .020" total material from the barrel. This is easily done with a safe-sided pillar file. Take a few strokes off each side keeping the cut square and test fit the barrel. Repeat until the barrel drops into the slide so the end of the hood contacts the breech face. I use .003" as a tolerance for side clearance but this number isn't critical. The sides of the hood shouldn't contact the slide when the pistol is assembled. Use a loose bushing and a barrel alignment block (Brownell's 080-000-041) that keeps the bottom lug vertical while test fitting the barrel. When you can insert a .003" feeler gage between the hood and slide on both sides with the barrel alignment block in place you're done.

Now we must shorten the hood so the barrel can lock up fully into the slide. Clamp the barrel vertically in your bench vise, take a stroke or two with a file and test fit. The result we are looking for is a barrel that can be fully locked up with a light tap on the bottom lugs from a plastic hammer. The hood should be kept square to the breech face. When you get close, ditch the file and use a stone. Final fitting is done with lapping compound so the hood just kisses the breech face when the barrel is in firing position. I fitted hoods with files and stones for many years but once I acquired a lathe I used it to shorten the hood length. It's much easier to keep it square than free-handing it with a file. Keep in mind that some older breech faces aren't square so adjusting the hood to fit them is necessary.

Cutting the bottom lugs to fit the slide stop is the most critical operation where accuracy is concerned. Back in the dark ages when I built bullseye pistols as a young sergeant, we used a special hand-driven lug cutter. The barrel, slide and frame were assembled, the cutter was inserted through the slide stop hole and rotated by hand while forward pressure was applied to the rear of the slide. With care, this will work. Brownell's sells a basic lug cutter (080-000-068) that is a simplified version of the tool we used.

However, having used both manual and machine tools to cut lugs I have to say a mill or mill drill with the proper fixture and a digital readout is the way to go. It's simply more accurate and allows the gunsmith to adjust lug contact with the slide stop during the cutting operation. I use a Weigand barrel fitting fixture which presents the barrel to the cutter at the proper lockup angle and allows the operator to remove the barrel and test fit it at any time without losing zero.

Reducing hood length on the lathe. Maintaining a square cut is simple using this method.

The last step of barrel fitting is finishing the chamber so headspace is correct. When we shortened the barrel hood we also shortened the headspace. This operation requires a chamber reamer and headspace gages. Take a cut, assemble the barrel to the slide, drop a headspace gage into the chamber and try to push the barrel up into full lockup. Repeat as necessary until the barrel can be locked with the "GO" gage in the chamber.

One unexpected problem we ran into when fitting the barrel was the frame feed ramp location. It was a bit farther forward than say a Colt or Springfield Armory gun. This caused the barrel ramp to slightly overhang the frame and surely would result in feeding issues. The rear of the Kart barrel was machined forward and the barrel feed ramp re-cut to create the proper jump between the frame and barrel. This is not a ding on RIA because their factory barrel fit fine and they can manufacture guns to whatever spec they desire but it's something to be aware of if you use an Armscor pistol as a base gun.

Fitting barrels requires specialized tools and knowledge. It may be best to farm out this job to an experienced professional.

With the barrel fitted, we can replace the loose "working" bushing with a precisely fitted one. For best accuracy the barrel bushing inside diameter must be a close fit to the barrel and the outside diameter should be a light press fit in the slide. Back in the day the bushings we used to build National Match pistols for the military teams had undersized bores and were hand reamed to fit the individual barrel. The outside diameters were expanded with plugs in a hydraulic press to fit the slides. Today, there are other options. Evolution Gun Works (www.egwguns.com) in Quakertown, Penn., can supply bushings in custom sizes. Our Kart barrel measured .580" at the muzzle and the Caspian slide bore was .699" so we simply ordered a bushing to fit.

The Caspian slide was supplied in the white (bare steel) and required finishing. The RIA frame has a parkerized finish and we attempted to match it rather than refinish the whole pistol. The stripped slide was degreased, bead blasted, warmed up under hot water and submerged in a hot tank of Brownell's Manganese Phosphate solution (082-200-128) where it proceeded to fizz like the proverbial Alka Seltzer tablet for a few minutes. The resulting color was dark, almost black, and matched the original RIA parts pretty well.

The sights are now installed on the finished slide along with the barrel, barrel bushing, firing pin, firing pin stop and extractor. Caspian slides utilize a small-diameter 9mm firing pin regardless of caliber so keep that in mind when ordering parts. The firing pin stop was milled down to provide clearance for the rear sight and a Caspian extractor was polished, installed and checked for tension.

Another consideration when assembling longslide 1911s is the recoil spring and spring plug. Ideally, we would prefer to use readily available standard-length recoil springs. If we run a standard spring plug a conventional spring will be an inch too short. We can remedy this situation in two ways: a combination of a standard plug and a shorter Commander-length plug stacked end to end or a special long plug with an internal shoulder that shortens spring travel by an inch. I usually go with the long plug sourced from EGW. Due to the extra slide mass spring rates will be slightly less than a standard Government Model. Subtract 2 pounds from the spring rate you would normally use for a given load in a 5-inch gun. The pistol we built for this article functioned fine with a 14 pound spring and 200-grain lead semi-wadcutters.

With the slide assembly finished we moved to the frame. The only frame modifications requested by the customer were a long aluminum trigger, tuned trigger pull and arched, checkered mainspring housing.

A Cylinder & Slide long aluminum trigger (209-000-033) dropped right into the frame. The original RIA sear and hammer were prepped on a Power Custom series 1 stoning fixture (713-070-002), the factory sear spring was replaced with a (properly adjusted) Wolff spring and the hammer pin was replaced with a slightly larger one from Cylinder and Slide. The final trigger pull weight was set at a crisp 3½ pounds with minimum overtravel.

Trigger work is an acquired skill. Incorrect adjustment of the fire control parts can cause a dangerous situation. If you are not experienced in this type of work I would suggest hiring a professional for best (and safest) results.

The finished pistol was test fired primarily with lead 200-grain semi-wadcutters over a moderate charge of Bullseye or WST. My personal accuracy standards are 1" 5-shot groups at 25 yards firing hand-held or 2" 10-shot groups at 50 yards from the machine rest. As I write this we are in the grip of a Maine winter and the machine rest has been put up until Spring but hand-held test groups look good so far and I'm sure our new Big Iron will not disappoint. FN

A special long EGW spring plug was included in our build but two stacked plugs will also work if you have a spare.

The RIA sear was honed on my well-worn Power Custom Series 1 fixture for correct engagement with the hammer hooks.

ODDBALL PART I GERMAN 7.65MM PISTOLS OF WWI AND WWII

TASCHENPISTOLEN/BEHELFSPISTOLEN IM MILITÄRISCHEN DIENST

In the late 1890s John Moses Browning, history's greatest arms designer, presented Hart O. Berg, the American representative of Fabrique Nationale d'Armes de Guerre (FN), of Herstal, Belgium with a prototype of a small semiauto pistol. FN had been established to manufacture Mauser rifles for the Belgian army and now that the contracts had been completed they were casting about for a product to keep the factory operating. The shrewd Belgians quickly saw the commercial possibilities of JMB's pistol and a contract was signed in July of 1897.

Browning's pistol was a striker-fired weapon with a single column, seven round box magazine in the grip retained by a heel type catch and was blowback operated. This meant that the breech was held closed by the weight of the slide and the resistance of the recoil spring until the bullet had left the barrel whereupon the slide reciprocated to the rear, extracting and ejecting the spent cartridge case and cocking the striker. As the recoil spring pulled the slide forward it stripped the next cartridge from the magazine located in the grip, chambering it as it went into battery.

Production of JMB's pistol, the FN Pistolet Modèle 1899, began in late 1898. A few minor changes resulted in it being re-baptized the Modèle 1900 the following year.

The Modèle 1899 served as the launching platform for a new cartridge, the 7.65mm Browning. Known in the USA as the .32 ACP, it utilized a 17mm semi-rimmed case that was topped with a 71-grain FMJ bullet that was propelled to approximately 800 fps. While it could only be considered a serious defensive cartridge by a confirmed pacifist, this round would go on to become one of the most popular centerfire pistol cartridges of all time.

But so as to get some important background information we must first backtrack a couple of decades.

While it bemused and befuddled shooters and those persons knowledgeable of firearms on this side of the Big Pond, in the 1880s their European counterparts decided that small caliber handguns were perfectly suitable for military, police and defensive purposes.

While we crude colonials clung to our .44- and .45-caliber revolvers, a number of European armies and gendarmeries began replacing their 11mm service side-arms with those firing 9mm, 8mm, 7.62mm and 7.5mm cartridges that were only notable for their rather unimpressive on-target performance.

The introduction of the first successful semiauto pistols in the late 19th and early 20th centuries saw this trend continue. And while some of them—the 7.65mm Parabellum and 7.63mm Mauser come to mind—became all the rage because they propelled their bullets to impressive velocities, these light weight, full metal jacketed (FMJ) projectiles tended to pass through an opponent doing little damage unless they struck a major organ or large bone. Despite a brief—and less than positive—flirtation with .38 caliber revolvers in the 1890s and early 20th century, the American armed forces shunned the small bore cartridge and continued to soldier on with .45 caliber handguns for the next century.

One of the reasons for the Europeans embracing the small caliber handgun cartridge was the different attitude we had towards handguns. While we Americans—and our British cousins—considered service handguns as true fighting weapons, the majority of Continental armies saw them as a badge of rank and authority to be issued sparingly to officers and high ranking noncoms. In general handguns were only issued to enlisted personnel such as cavalry troopers and specialist troops whose duties precluded them from carrying rifles.

The belief was that if a handgun was used at all, it would be as a last-ditch defensive weapon used to prevent an officer from being captured or killed. And in such a scenario it was felt a small, light handgun would be perfectly suitable.

As for law enforcement, it must be remembered that outside of certain regions—the Balkans come to mind—late 19th century Europe was a fairly law abiding society. Most countries had homogenous populations with low crime rates. In fact in many European countries—the UK, Denmark, Norway, etc.—police officers did not normally carry firearms. In the rare instances where the use of firearms was necessary they were generally issued carbines while handguns were restricted to officers and specially trained personnel.

Now, back to semiauto pistols.

Belgium's army was the first to adopt a 7.65mm pistol when it took Browning's design into service as the Pistolet Browning Modèle 1900. From then on it was an instant success being adopted by armies and police forces around the world in addition to the vast numbers sold on the civilian market. Its popularity was such that in many parts of the world the word “Browning” became synonymous with “semiautomatic pistol.” By the time production ceased in 1911 in excess of 700,000 units had left the FN factory.

It didn't take FN's competitors long to jump on the bandwagon in hopes of grabbing a share of this lucrative market. Over the next decade and a half, a flood of 7.65mm pistols emerged from factories in Belgium, Austria-Hungary, Great Britain, France, China, the USA, Spain and Germany to be eagerly snatched up by soldier, policeman and civilian alike. While military personnel and police usually carried them in holsters, the majority of these pistols were small enough that they could be used for concealed carry and earned the sobriquet “pocket pistols” (in German “Taschenpistolen”). By 1914 the majority of continental police forces from the London Metropolitan Police to the Tsar's okhrannoye otdelenie had adopted 7.65mm pistols.

On June 28, 1914 the heir apparent to the Austro-Hungarian throne, Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his wife the Duchess Sophie, were assassinated by the

One might say that WWI was what made the 7.65mm pistol. In many European armies, officers were required to provide their own sidearms and the choice was often dependent upon the officer's personal preference, financial situation, duties or rank. Based upon photographic evidence I feel it's safe to say that front line/combat officers used larger caliber, more powerful service pistols while higher ranking/command level officers favored 7.65mm pistols which served the traditional role of badges of rank and authority and, in worst case scenarios, as last ditch defensive weapons.

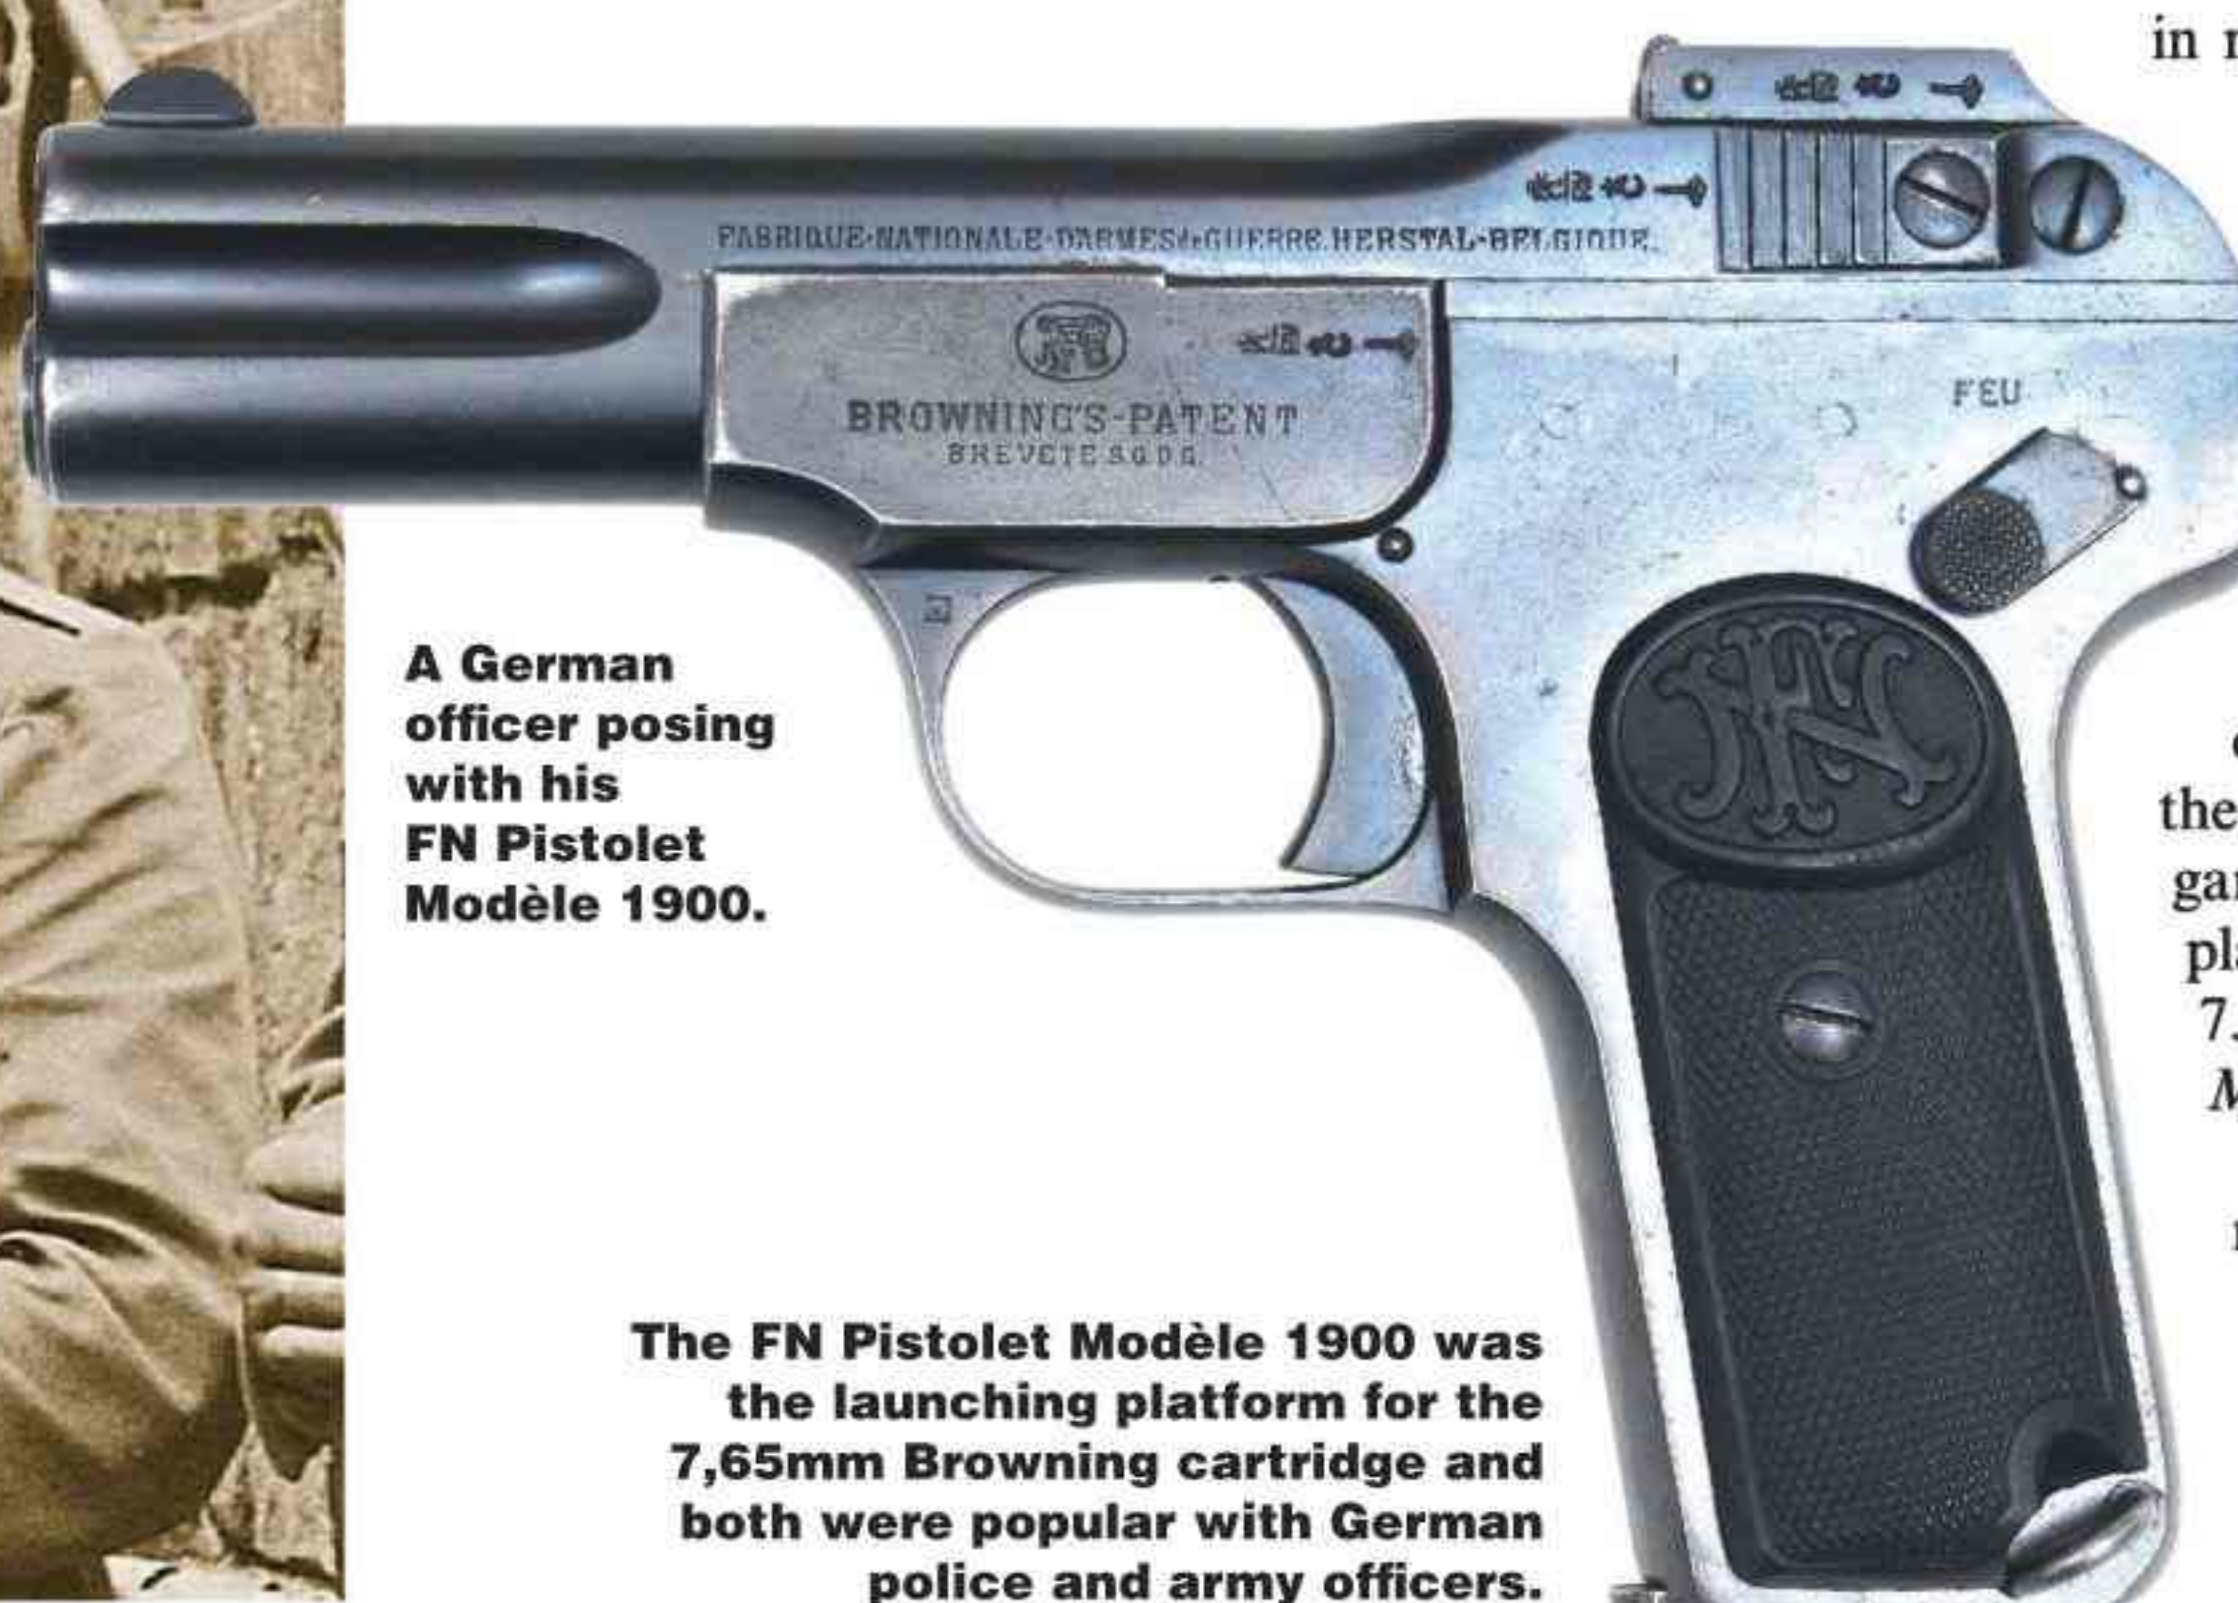

Of the combatant armies, 7.65mm pistols saw their widest use by Germany, France and Italy. In this article we will examine those used by the armed forces of Imperial Germany.

In 1914 the standard handgun of the Deutsches Heer (Imperial German Army) was the Pistole Parabellum, Modell 1908 (P08 Luger) while the Kaiserliche Marine (Imperial Navy) used the Pistole, Marine-Modell 1904, both chambered for the 9mm Patrone 08 (9mm Parabellum). While highly regarded, the P08 was expensive to manufacture, ammunition sensitive and proved not overly reliable in the vile conditions of trench warfare.

Bosnian-Serb nationalist (or "terrorist" depending on your point of view) Gavrilo Princip who shot both of them with a 7.65mm FN Pistolet Browning Modèle 1910. This event is generally acknowledged as the spark that set off the conflagration we now call World War I.

A German officer posing with his FN Pistolet Modèle 1900.

The FN Pistolet Modèle 1900 was the launching platform for the 7.65mm Browning cartridge and both were popular with German police and army officers.

Many German officers equipped themselves with privately purchased Mauser Selbstlade-Pistolen C96 (the "Broomhandle") firing the 7.63mm Pistole-Patrone Mauser. As P08s could not be produced in sufficient quantities, the German government purchased large numbers of C96s and also contracted for Mauser to produce them chambered for the 9mm Patrone 08.

But the war quickly showed that even the most pessimistic estimates of small arms attrition were totally inaccurate. In addition, the unique conditions of trench warfare led to most armies issuing sidearms in greater numbers than ever before or since. Officers, assault troops (Sturmtruppen), artillery and machine gun crews, signalers, messengers, transport drivers, military police—and every infantryman who could beg, borrow or steal one—wanted, and in many cases needed, a handgun. This led to the Germans (and all the other combatants) racing to find Behelfspistolen ("substitute pattern pistols") to equip their rapidly expanding armed forces.

The obvious choice was the 7.65mm pistol. Not only were most of them quick and inexpensive to manufacture, but there were already a number of German companies tooled up to produce them. While they would not have been the Herr's first choice, it was a matter of "beggars can't be choosers," and contracts were placed with a number of gunmakers for all the 7.65mm pistols they might care to produce. Macht schnell!

Besides German-made pistols, the Imperial German armed forces issued a wide variety of foreign and captured pistols to their personnel. As a detailed discussion of them is beyond the scope of this article, in this report we are going to examine three German-made 7.65mm pistols that saw

Mauser-Selbstlade-Pistole Modell 1914¹

Josef Nickl was an Austrian (some sources say German) engineer who was hired by Waffenfabrik Mauser in 1904. He envisioned producing a family of pistols all based up a single design which could be scaled up or down as necessary for any cartridge.

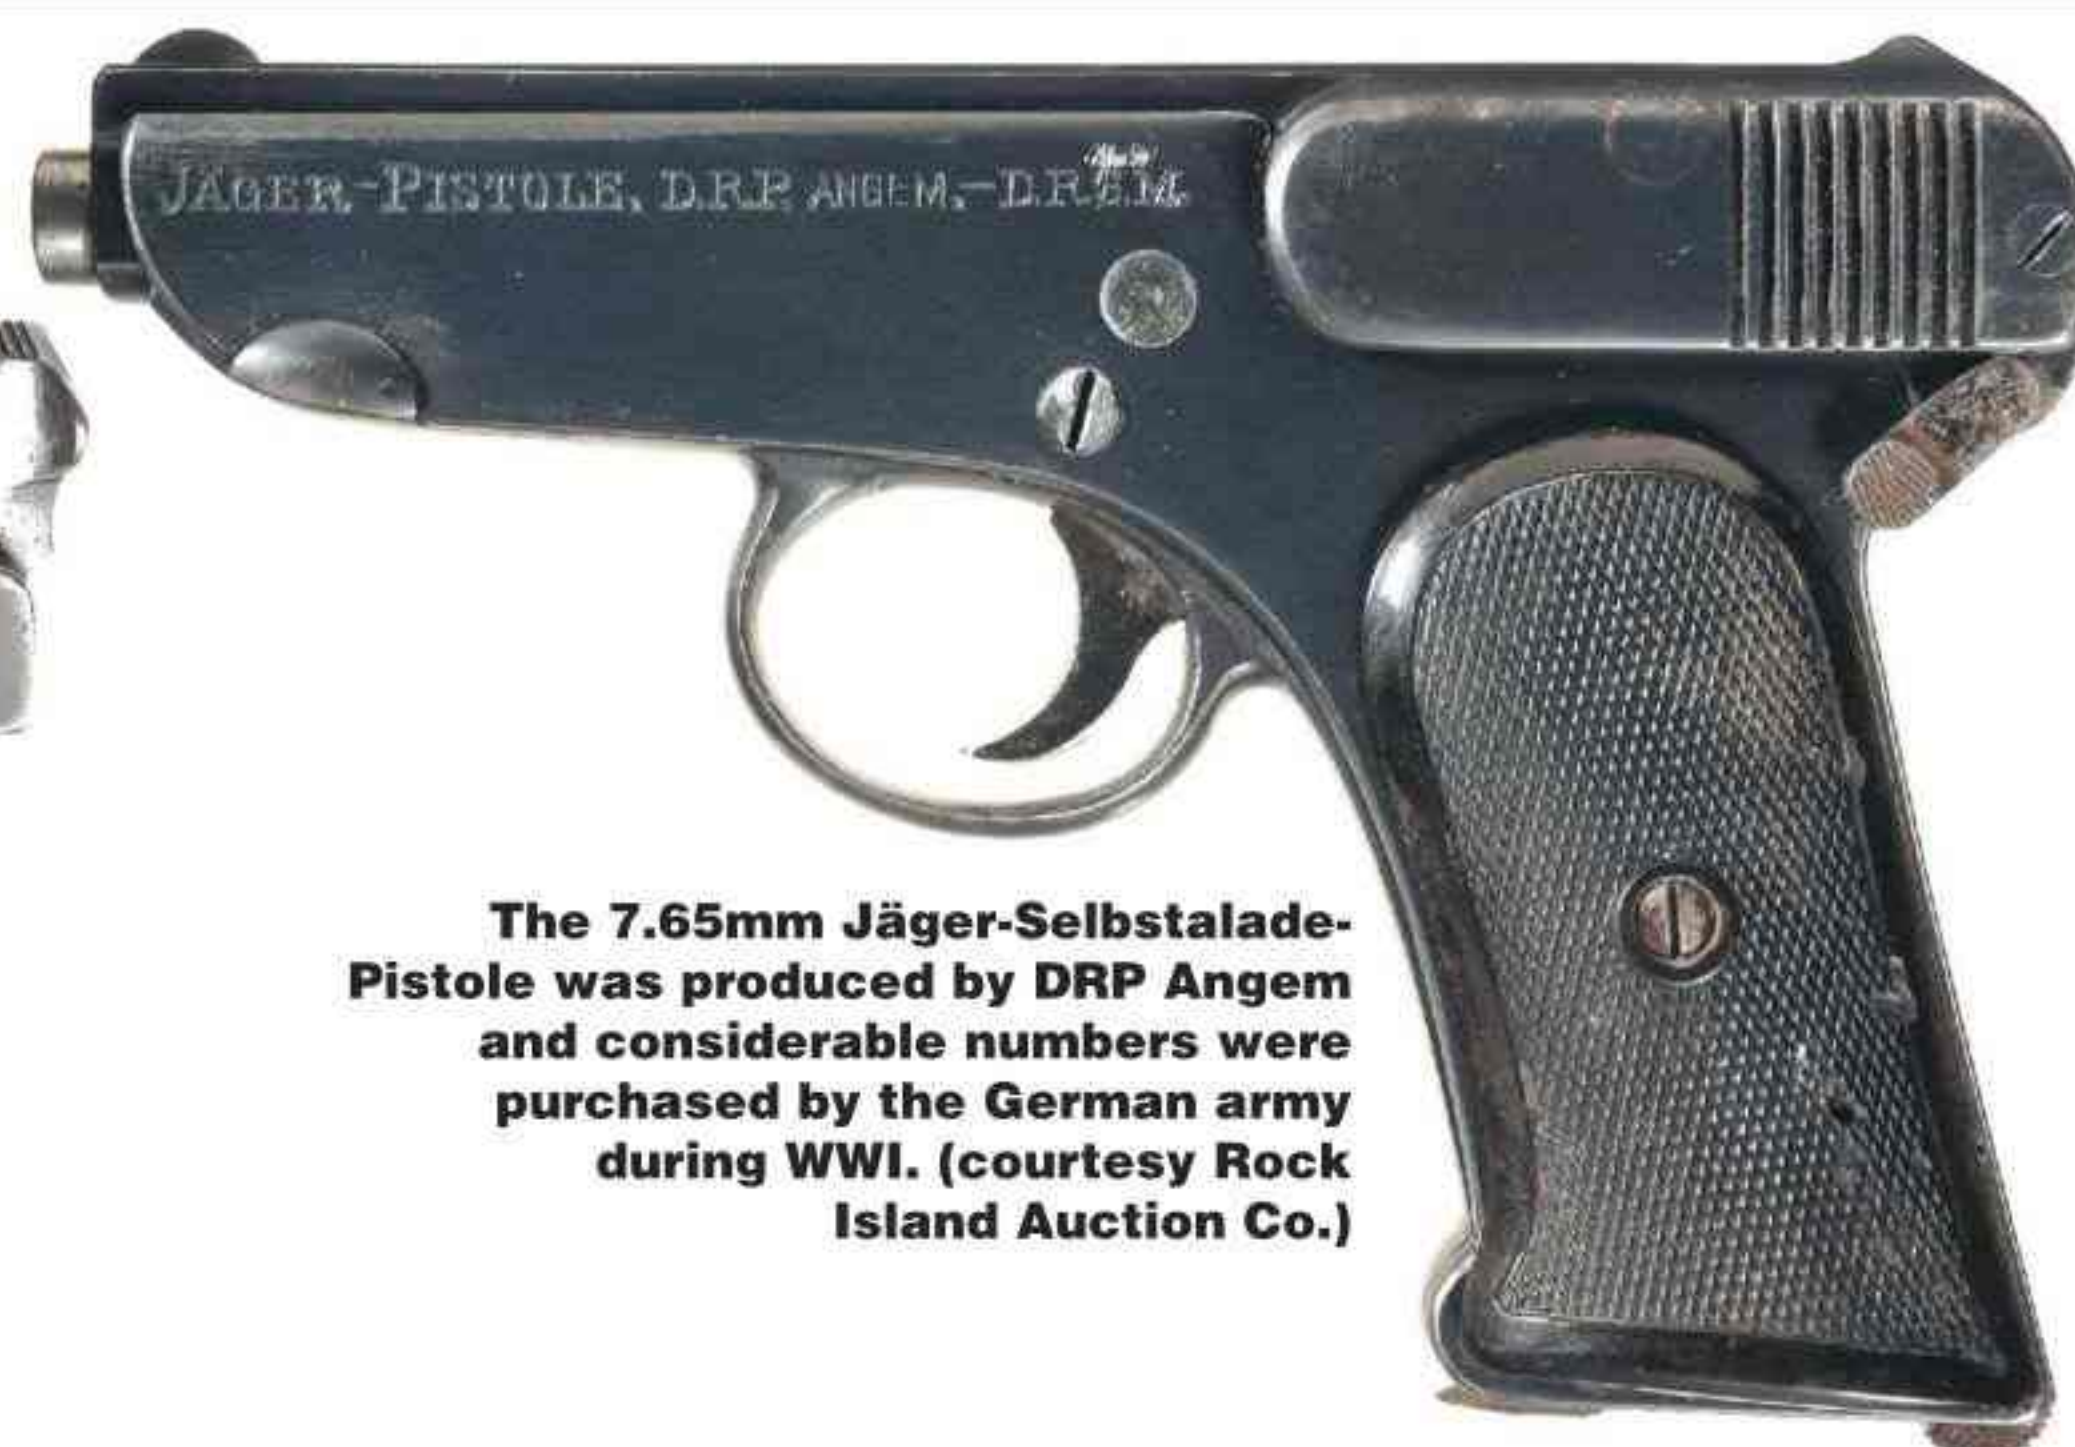

His first designs, delayed blowback pistols chambered for the 9mm Parabellum, did not function reliably and a blowback operated (mass locking, or Massenverschluss in German) design was tried next. But the 9mm cartridge proved too powerful and he abandoned that idea.

Mauser desperately wanted a product to capture a share of the lucrative Taschenpistolen market and Nickl's next design proved more successful.

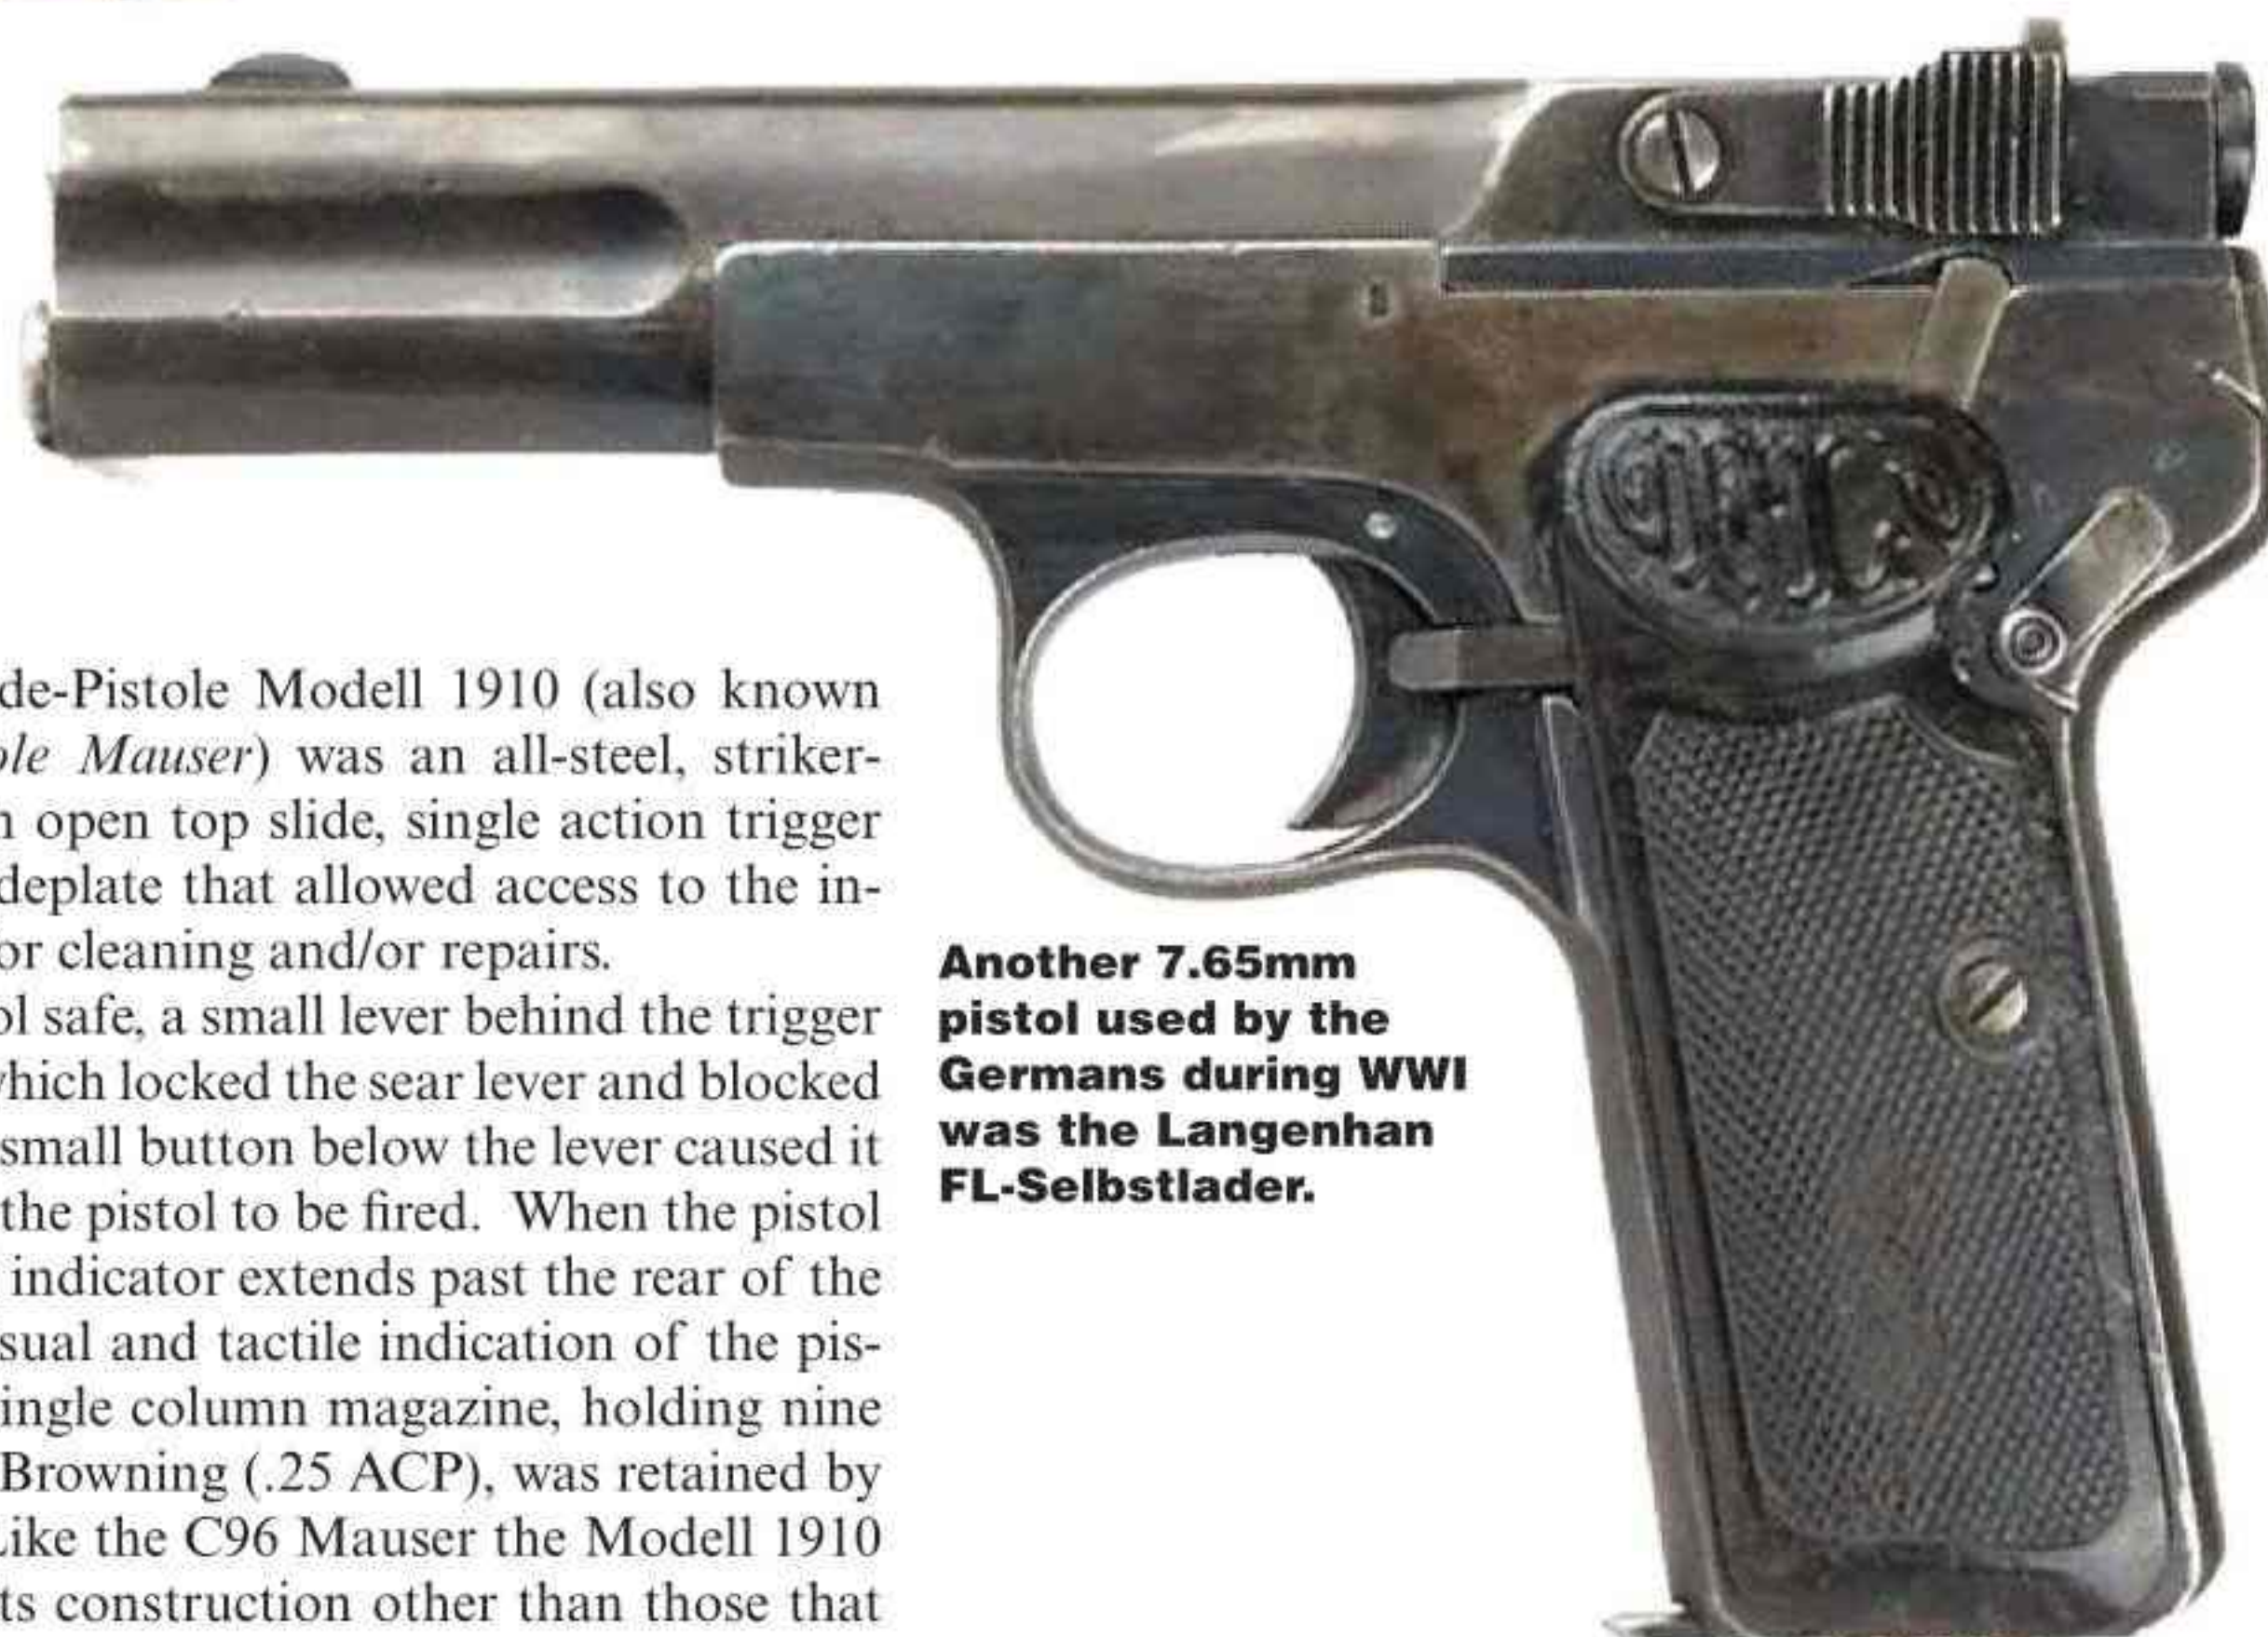

Nickl's Selbstlade-Pistole Modell 1910 (also known as the Taschenpistole Mauser) was an all-steel, striker-fired design with an open top slide, single action trigger and a removable sideplate that allowed access to the internal mechanism for cleaning and/or repairs.

To make the pistol safe, a small lever behind the trigger was pressed down which locked the sear lever and blocked the sear. Pressing a small button below the lever caused it to pop up allowing the pistol to be fired. When the pistol is cocked a cocking indicator extends past the rear of the slide providing a visual and tactile indication of the pistol's condition. A single column magazine, holding nine rounds of 6.35mm Browning (.25 ACP), was retained by a heel-type catch. Like the C96 Mauser the Modell 1910 used no screws in its construction other than those that retain the grips.

Mauser's Selbstlade-Pistole Modell 1914 was a quality product whose price limited it to use by better off German officers. Note the exposed barrel, serrated grasping "humps" on the rear of the slide and heel type magazine release.

The Modell 1910 proved popular on the European civilian market and many were also used by police detectives and high-ranking army officers.

In 1914, with war clouds looming, Mauser assigned Nickl the task of upsizing the Modell 10 to handle the 7.65mm cartridge. While the resulting Selbstlade-Pistole Modell 1914 (also referred to as the Neue Modell—New Model) aped the appearance of its smaller caliber brother, besides being larger it included a number of structural and mechanical differences.²

To my way of thinking the most notable (practical?) difference was the slide stop. After the last round has been fired, the magazine follower rises up and holds the slide open. As the magazine is withdrawn it tips the rear of a spring-loaded hold-open catch upward locking the slide open. When a loaded or empty magazine is reinserted, the right lip of the magazine tips the rear of the hold-open catch down, releasing the slide allowing it to run forward.

Apparently Modell 1914 pistols were sold commercially, primarily to military officers, until 1915 after which all production went to fill German army orders with approximately 103,000 units being delivered by 1918.³ Manufacture continued after the war with slight modifications until 1936 (see below).

Dreyse-Selbstlade-Pistole Modell 1907

Johann Nikolaus Dreyse (1787–1867) was master locksmith from the German state of Saxony who turned his talents towards firearms and in 1824 established a factory in Sömmerda. He is best known for his bolt action, breech loading Needle Rifle which was adopted by Prussia. Known as the Preußische-Zündnadel-Gewehr M.41 it, and later models, were deciding factors in Prussia's defeats of Denmark (1866), Austria (1866) and France (1870–71) which led to her becoming the preeminent German state.

After Johann's death, Waffenfabrik von Dreyse was run by his son Franz who offered a variety of sporting rifles, shotguns, pistols and revolvers, some using the needle fire mechanism. But the company's fortunes declined steadily and, after Franz's death in 1894 Henrich Ehrhardt, a major stockholder, gained control of the company which he sold to the Rheinische Metallwaaren & Maschinenfabrik (RM&M, later known as Rheinmetall) in 1901.

Wanting to get a share of the ever-growing Taschenpistole market, RM&M assigned the task of designing a 7.65mm pistol to their engineer Louis Schmeisser, although there is some controversy over whether or not Schmeisser was the actual designer.⁴ RM&M's marketing department decided to take advantage of Dreyse's name recognition and baptized the pistol the Dreyse Selbstlade-Pistole Modell 1907.

The Modell 1907 was a blowback operated, striker-fired design, which from its overall shape, the grip angle, the magazine release, and the positioning of the manual safety, it is obvious that it was strongly influenced by FN's Modèle 1900. As German police agencies were buying thousands of *Modèle 1900*s at this time, perhaps RM&M saw the similar appearance of their pistol as a marketing tool.

Can YOU reassemble this firearm?

With these AGI Armorer's Courses on DVD you could reassemble it, repair it, clean it, tune it, and more!

At AGI we believe you can't fix it unless you truly understand HOW the firearm is intended to work. Master Gunsmith Bob Dunlap explains design and function of each model using cutaway firearms, giving you exclusive close-up views of the inside of the firearm not normally visible. You just aren't going to be able to see this anywhere else.

Each video course provides a clear visual demonstration of the intricate internal workings of the firearm, teaching you how each part is intended to function. We then guide you through the complete step-by-step disassembly, cleaning and reassembly process, troubleshooting, how to make basic repairs, provide tricks and tips, and show you how to avoid common costly mistakes. Design of the feeding and locking mechanisms, the trigger system, proper ejection, and every other function of each specific model of firearm is covered. And AGI keeps you out of trouble by telling you what parts you should never remove! $39.95 each plus s/h Each DVD runs 90 min. to 2 hours in length and includes a printable schematic! SALE - BUY ONE GET ONE FREE!

The barrel is fixed in the frame beneath the slide. About 75% of the slide—which provides much of the mass required for blowback operation—sits above the barrel and has grasping grooves at the muzzle end. An integral breechblock is located beneath the rear of the slide, inside the frame and contains the striker/firing mechanism, extractor and cocking indicator, which protrudes from the rear of the rear of the breech when the striker is cocked. A simple rotating manual safety is located at the left, rear of the frame. A blade front sight sits inside a groove on the top of the slide while the V notch rear is at the rear of the frame.

The Modell 1907 is a hinged-frame design. Moving a catch at the rear of the frame allows the slide/barrel unit to be pivoted forward for disassembly.⁵ A single column, seven round magazine was retained in the grip frame by a heel type catch. Most pistols have a rather prominent lanyard ring attached to the bottom of the grip frame and a disconnecter.

Despite its odd appearance and complexity, the Modell 1907 proved a popular item and were purchased by a number of German police agencies. Referred to as the Polizeimodell, the Sächsische Gendarmerie (Saxony Police) purchased seven hundred of the first production run. There were a number of mechanical and cosmetic changes made to the pistol during its production life, too many to discuss here.⁶

Modell 1907s proved popular on the European civilian market, and before 1915 German and Austrian army officers purchased many. In 1912 the Papal Swiss Guard acquired thirty pistols for issue to officers and security personnel, some of which reportedly remained in service until 1990.⁷

With the onset of hostilities, all RM&M production—except for small lots sold to Manufacture ceased sometime in 1918 with a total production of approximately 250,000 pistols. After the war, small numbers were sold (war reparations?) to Czechoslovakia and Lithuania while others remained in service with German police well into the 1930s.

Selbstlade-Pistolen Behöllä, Menta & Stenda

There is a bit of controversy about the pedigree of these pistols. Some credit the design to Leopold Stenda while other sources claim August Menz developed it.

Be that as it may, in late 1915/1916 the German government instituted the Hindenburg Program with the aim of doubling German industrial production to greatly increase weapons and munitions for the war effort. As a result of this program several gun making firms in Suhl

"Our visits with our sellers are always pleasant, I look forward to every flight."

Missouri's Flying Gun Runner

The gun runners of old used sailing ships or steam locomotives to move their wares. Today, there is a Class 3 dealer in Missouri who uses something a lot faster. If you are selling a machine gun collection, Midwest Tactical Inc., will come to you: by air. Frank Goepfert, MWT founder and president, owns and operates a Cirrus SR22 airplane. Since two other company employees are also pilots, MWT can cover the map to meet with customers and close deals on machine gun collections.

Nothing else in the gun business is as regulated as Title II arms like machine guns, suppressors and short-barreled guns. A machine gun dealer must know federal and state regulations inside and out, along with knowing current market values and the players in the trade. MWT is staffed with NFA specialists who deal with trusts, estates, National Firearms Act (NFA) transfers and Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms (ATF) regulations.

Buyers for machine guns tend to be widely scattered, as do sellers. By its very nature, the NFA business is a national business. Having the ability to go meet the customers and see the merchandise is a huge plus. There are only about 186,000 transferable machine guns on the NFA registry, and there are at most only a few hundred transferable machine guns for sale at any time. As a result, prices of NFA arms have risen to levels once thought impossible. Sellers, especially heirs of war veterans, may have no idea the value of their guns.

Frank originally pursued his private pilot license as a hobby, but the ability to cover ground in a fraction of the time needed to drive soon started to pay dividends for the business. "Meeting customers face to face is always a pleasure," Frank says. "Gun people tend to be nice people with whom we share common interests, including flying. Our visits with our sellers are always pleasant, I look forward to every flight."

MWT is licensed to deal in machine guns and standard Title I firearms such as pistols, rifles and shotguns. In Addition, MWT holds a Type 07 license with SOT in Missouri. While machine guns are the focus of the business, if you also have Title I firearms to sell, MWT can purchase the entire collection.

MWT does the paperwork and arranges shipment of the guns after ATF approves the transfer. ATF can take months to approve a transfer, even to a dealer. MWT still pays up front. Most customers only have one or two machine guns to sell, and small purchases still make up the bulk of the business. Those buys of fewer than five machine guns can usually be made using pictures and forms, without the need for a visit.

A growing number of purchases are collections and Federal Firearms License (FFL) closeouts that often benefit from a visit to the customer, especially those sellers who are not familiar with machine guns or NFA procedures. MWT will travel to meet the customers and offer an honest assessment. On more than one occasion, the customers were heirs of estates that involved an FFL business.

There are a lot of hoops to jump through with ATF on FFL liquidations, and the specialists on the MWT payroll can handle them smoothly, dealing with local ATF field offices and the NFA branch. If you are not looking to sell an entire collection, MWT can broker your guns. The fee is 10%, and MWT does all the paperwork, making life a lot simpler for the seller.

The NFA business is unlike any other retail model. The inventory is scarce and cannot be ordered up from a local big box store. MWT can only get inventory from customers who are willing to sell, so they make selling easy.

Frank Goepfert welcomes your call if you are thinking of selling, or want a verbal appraisal on the current market value for your machine guns. Discussions about planning for future estate or business liquidations are also welcome. NFA transfers are serious business which require knowledge and expertise. The MWT team will make selling your machine guns both enjoyable and lucrative.

received contracts to produce pistols based upon Menz's (Stenda's?) design: Waffenfabriken August Menz, Becker & Holländer (B&H) and Stenda Werke. Pistols produced by Menz were called the Menta while Stenda's were called, well, the Stenda. All were produced to a more or less standard pattern although minor differences will be found.

B&H's Selbstlade-Pistole Behöllä (BE...HOLLÄ from the firm's owners names) appears to be the most common today. A mediocre quality blowback operated 7.65mm pistol, it was intended for issue to low-ranking or rear-echelon personnel. It would appear to owe many of its features to the Ruby pistols being produced by Basque gunmakers in Spain for the French and the Pistola Auto-matica Modello 1915 being made by Beretta for the Italian army.

It had a fully exposed barrel, which not only insured positive ejection of spent cases, but reduced the machining operations necessary to make the slide. The slide reciprocates on rails on the frame and contains a simple striker mechanism and extractor.

The pistol has a pivoting single-action trigger and safety lever located at the left, rear of the frame that is rotated downward 90 degrees to put the pistol on safe. The single-column, seven round magazine is secured by a heel-type catch while hard rubber (later production were grooved wood) grip panels are retained by screws. There was no slide stop nor did the magazine follower hold the slide open when it was empty.

An unusual feature of these pistols was the method of retaining the barrel in the frame. A dovetail shaped lug beneath the chamber slid into a matching seat in the frame, where a pin retained it. The pin had to be punched out through two holes in the slide before the pistol was dismantled.⁸

B&H and Menz delivered approximately 60,000 pistols to the German army before the 1918 Armistice.

After the war Menz continued producing the pistol and a small quantity (less than 1,500) were sold to Lithuania. Reportedly Herr Stenda gained control of B&H after the war and continued to produce his Stenda pistol. Another postwar manufacturer was H.M. Gerling & Cie of Arnstadt who produced about 4,000 pistols that were sold under the name Leonhardt (Lion Heart). It's possible that most, if not all, of the post-war pistols were assembled using parts left over from the military contracts.

Besides the three 7.65mm pistols examined here, the German army also fielded large numbers of the Selbstlade-Pistole Jäger, Langenhan FL-Selbstlader, Sauer Modell 1913, Walther Modell 4, Steyr M.08, Frommer-Stop Pisztoly 12.M and the Roth-Sauer.⁹

In Part II of this report we will examine a trio of foreign-made 7.65mm pistols that were among the myriad of Behelfspistolen used by the Third Reich during World War II.

BUILD A 9MM AR-15: PART III CHEAP AND CHEAPER!

In this final installment, Matthews completes his budget-busting 9mm pistol build and takes his pair of projects to the range.

By Steven Matthews

In the last installment (Part 2), I made a pile of parts on the lathe, mainly parts to make a 9mm Suomi barrel fit. Now I'll get on with it and finish up this 9mm AR-15 pistol.

Once the barrel is done you can slide it into the receiver and install the barrel nut. Do not torque the barrel nut down very tight at this point because you may need to remove it later to polish or modify the feed ramp. Later when you have bench tested the gun for functioning you can install the nut to final tightness. When you do get around to permanently installing the barrel there is a recommend way of tightening the nut. Since this project has no gas tube, installation is much easier. Slide the barrel into the receiver and make sure it is fully seated against the front of the receiver. Apply some heavy grease to the receiver threads and to the front edge of the flange to make tightening easier and to prevent galling of the soft aluminum threads. Screw the barrel nut on hand tight.

To tighten the nut you will need a special wrench. You will need a general purpose AR-15 assembly tool or a GI barrel nut wrench. Prices for these tools can be as low as $10 for a GI-type barrel wrench and combination tool to as much as $50 for a multi-purpose tool made by some of the big name AR-15 gunsmithing suppliers. I have several tools but for this job I used my DPMS AR-15 multi-purpose tool that cost about $30 from many sources. In this case you need the proper tool because improvised tools will likely damage you barrel nut. The DPMS multi-tool, and most other brands, feature two or more pins that engage the notches or holes in the barrel nuts. Place the tool into the barrel nut and tighten it down to about 15 foot-pounds of torque. Once tightened you then loosen it. Now you tighten it again but this time tighten it to about 25 ft.-lbs. of torque. Now loosen it again. The barrel nut can now be tightened down to a final torque of 35-50 ft.-lbs. Supposedly, this three-stage tightening and loosening allows the nut to seat better on the threads. It is the recommended procedure although GI torque specs are higher than those listed here because a steel barrel nut is used on GI-format guns. Exact torque is not too important because GI torque specs are 35-75 foot-pounds. This wide range is to allow you to align the notches in the handguard and allow passage of the gas tube. Because I have used a torque wrench a lot in the past, I typically just guess on torque settings and for go using a torque wrench.

Once the barrel nut is installed, I screwed my handguard to the nut. The round handguard can be difficult to grip and tighten. If you need a better grip to tighten the handguard further, you can use an inexpensive strap wrench to grip the handguard. These can be bought for less than

A special 9mm door and a rubber case deflector were initially installed on the project. Unfortunately the case deflector kicked some brands of cases right back into the action so it was removed.

The barrel nut is torqued down with the aid of a DPMS AR-15 combination tool and Brownells receiver block set. Final barrel nut torque will be from 35-65 foot-pounds.

If you have trouble tightly gripping the smooth round hand guards an inexpensive strap wrench can be utilized to securely grip the handguard.

$10 from stores and websites like Harbor Freight. You can also use a little removable liquid thread locker (such as Loctite #242) on the threads at final assembly to keep the handguards tight on the nut during use. Just be aware that if you use thread lockers disassembly can be difficult. Thread lockers are basically high strength glue and if applied correctly they are extremely strong.

To finish my upper receiver assembly I needed to do a couple more small jobs. Although not required for good operation, I installed a door assembly and a rubber 9mm case deflector. These were purchased from JSE for about $15. Unfortunately I had to remove the case deflector later during test firing. For reasons unknown the deflector deflected certain brands of ejected cases right back into the gun. This resulted in an immediate stoppage with a smashed case wedged in between the bolt and rear of the barrel with the new round about half way out of the magazine. This occurred with one brand of ammo only but it was one I would be using a lot. When I removed the deflector functioning returned to 100%. With the case deflector installed fired cases were being dropped right at my feet when they didn't jam up. With no case deflector ejected cases were thrown forcefully about 6 feet to my right and about 3 feet forward. I prefer to have 100% functioning rather than having cases conveniently dropped at my feet.

Because this gun featured a 9mm bolt that did not have forward assist notches, I had no need for a forward assist button. I did not want to buy a regular button if I wasn't going to use it. Dummy buttons can be purchased but I did not want to spend money for one. I therefore made my own for free. I just took a 1/2" bolt and turned it into a dummy button on my lathe. This is just another example how home gunsmithing can save you money. That expensive lathe pays for itself every time I make my own parts.

I used an inexpensive surplus charging handle for this project. Since the handle only cost me $10 I decide to add an extended handle release. This $8.99 part was bought from CDNN and installs simply by driving out a roll pin and substituting the new release. With the upper done, except for testing and applying a final finish, it was time to turn my attention to the lower receiver assembly.

Before going on to lower receiver assembly there are some things I should mention to novice AR-15 pistol builders. This concerns the legal aspects of the AR-15 lower receiver. Since this project was a pistol I used a virgin receiver. A virgin receiver is a receiver that has never been assembled into either a pistol or a rifle. This is required per BATFE regulations. It is illegal to use a rifle receiver to build a pistol. If you use an existing rifle receiver to build a pistol you would be creating what the BATFE calls a short-barreled rifle (SBR). SBRs are highly regulated by the BATFE. A SBR must be registered with the BATFE, a $200 tax must be paid, a background check needs to be run and lengthy paper work must be filled out. After waiting for several months the BATFE finally gives approval for you to possess it. Failure to follow the rules is a Federal felony punishable by up to 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine. To create a legal AR-15 pistol you must use a virgin receiver or an existing pistol receiver. To be considered a virgin receiver the receiver must have never been assembled into a rifle or pistol. This means ever in its lifetime. If someone assembled it into a rifle 20 years ago and then took it back apart and put the bare receiver on a shelf it is still a rifle receiver regardless of its present condition. Once a rifle, always a rifle. The best way to be sure you are getting a virgin receiver is to buy a brand new receiver of recent production from a licensed gun dealer. This way you are sure of what you are getting. You should avoid buying a virgin receiver from an unknown individual. The private seller may tell you it is a virgin receiver but can you trust them? Some people will tell you anything to make a sale. Even if the seller is being truthful does he really know the history of the receiver ever since it was first made? If they bought it secondhand it could have been in rifle format sometime in its past and they would have no way of knowing that fact. If a Federal trace was run on the receiver and it came back as formerly being a rifle you would be guilty of a felony. Saying that the seller assured you that it was a virgin receiver would be a poor defense to felony charges. You are responsible for the legal status of the receiver not some past owner or the seller.

Since the 9mm bolt carrier did not feature forward assist notches, the forward assist button was not needed. A dummy button was made out of a 1/2" bolt at the cost of 15 cents.

The other option to create a legal AR-15 pistol is to buy a new pistol receiver from a licensed dealer. Some

For a pistol project one should use a new virgin receiver such as this Anderson receiver for legal concerns. It is illegal to use an existing rifle receiver on a pistol project.

The pistol buffer tube is locked in place with a lock ring. This Present Arms assembly fixture securely holds the parts in place for tightening. No more parts flopping around on the workbench!

AR receiver makers offer AR-15 receivers that are actually classified as pistol receivers. This is due to the fact so many hobbyists are now making AR-15 pistols and some manufacturers want to cater to that market. The same cautions about buying a receiver in a private sale apply to pistol receivers also.

Your safest bet is to simply buy a new receiver—whether a virgin receiver or pistol receiver—from a licensed dealer. There would be little financial incentive to buy a used receiver because they are so inexpensive at this time. There are a few legal exceptions concerning the status and definition of an AR receiver but there is no reason to consider anything other than brand new receiver that has been sold by a licensed dealer. By the way, when you make out the form 4473 at the point of sale the receiver is listed on the form as a receiver only, not as a rifle or pistol. If it is a stripped receiver it cannot be a rifle or pistol because it has never been assembled into either form. The fact that some manufacturers are offering stripped receivers classified as pistol receivers even though they have never been assembled as a pistol is something of a gray area in the rules. I don't know how they are offering them as pistol receivers unless they have received a rule variance from the BATFE.

I used a budget priced Anderson AR-15 receiver for this project. I used the version that features an integral trigger guard. I prefer this type and they cost no more than a standard receiver. While these great receivers are offered for sale in the $60–$90 price range by many vendors if you look hard enough you can find them under $50 like I did. No matter if you buy a first-rate receiver or a cosmetic defect receiver you are getting a great Mil-Spec receiver from Anderson

Installing my $29.99 lower parts kit (LPK) is so easy I won't bother explaining it here. There are plenty of diagrams available in catalogs or online that can show the novice where the parts fit. Installing the LPK will take less than a half-hour.

Because this is a pistol project I used a pistol buffer tube. A pistol buffer tube has no provisions for fitting a stock. It will be completely round and will not have the rib on the bottom that holds the stock in correct alignment. Because the pistol tubes are round, they simply screw on in any position and don't have to be indexed. There are many lengths of pistol buffer tubes and the diameters can vary between brands. Unlike rifle buffer tubes there are no standards for size. The interior lengths of all models will be roughly 7 inches but the exterior lengths can vary as much as a couple inches. The tube I used had an exterior length of 9 inches. Many pistol buffer tubes, mine included, feature a knurled portion near the front. Many also have a ring or collar that functions as a stop if you are installing a SIG-Tac brace. The SIG-Tac brace is so popular that there are many buffer tubes made specifically for installing a brace.

Pistol buffers just screw into the rear of the receiver and are locked in place with a regular carbine stock lock ring. Remember when you install the buffer tube to first install the rear take down pin, the detent and spring into the back of the receiver. You also have to install a receiver end plate because that retains the detent and spring. The tube screws in till it is flush or just slightly below the front edge of the threaded receiver ring. Before screwing the tube in to full depth you have to place the buffer detent and spring in its hole in the bottom of the receiver. The tube screws in far enough to keep the detent from coming out of its hole but still allow the short tab on top of the detent to raise high enough to keep the buffer in the tube. You use a carbine stock lock ring wrench to tighten down the lock ring. These can be bought for just a few dollars and will prevent you from marring the lock ring if you try to improvise a tool. To help secure the buffer tube and lock ring, I put a dab of thread locker on the buffer tube threads. Only use a limited amount of thread locker such as Loctite #242. If you use too much it may run down into the buffer detent hole and solidly lock up the detent. I only apply thread locker to the last couple threads from the rear side so that I don't have worry about it running into the buffer detent hole. Make sure you use a removable type thread locker. High strength lockers can glue the parts together almost permanently. If you use too much or the wrong type of locker the only way to get the tube out of the receiver will be to heat the tube and receiver with a torch and that will not do any good to either part.

Once I had my pistol buffer tube installed, I installed a standard M4 carbine buffer spring. It seems that everyone has their preferred spring for the buffer. Some use special high strength springs while others go with standard springs. I had good luck with a standard $3 M4 buffer spring. It worked and fit the budget; what more could I ask for? After the spring went in I slipped in a special 9mm buffer. This one was 5.3 ounces where as a standard buffer is about 3 ounces. There are a wide variety of special heavy buffers made for 9mm ARs and they can get expensive. Some people report that they needed a special weight buffer to make the gun run right but I had good luck with the PSA 9mm buffer. It was cheap ($15) and it worked. That's all I could ask for in a buffer. Prior to installing the spring and buffer, apply a thin coating of oil to each part. Lubrication will allow the parts to cycle smoother and reduce wear on the tube.

Once I had my buffer tube installed it was time to install my bargain priced Century marked SIG-Tac brace. I immediately found out why it was so cheap. The hole in the brace was way too small to fit over the buffer tube. It was so tight that I could only get it on about an inch. Apparently this was the manufacturing defect that resulted in the extremely low price. Fortunately this problem was correctable. I took a large wood dowel and wrapped it with coarse sand paper. I slid the sand paper dowel into the hole and spun it with an electric drill to sand the hole to a larger size. The material of the brace was very tough and it took quite a bit of sanding to open the hole up enough that it would slide over the tube. Considering that a new brace cost $125 I figured 15 minutes of sanding was more than a fair exchange for the cost savings. Once I reworked the $25 reject brace it looked and worked just as good as a new one. The brace did not come with the Velcro strap that is standard equipment but I had an extra one from another brace because they include two straps with a new brace.

There was one final part that needed to be installed in the lower receiver. This was the magazine adapter block. I had two choices. I had the Pro-Mag plastic block that I originally bought for the project and I had the surplus aluminum block from the PSA kit. While either would work I chose the PSA block. Because it was part of the cost of the carbine parts kit, it was basically a free part for this project. It had a better-shaped feed ramp plus I preferred the aluminum construction to plastic. Many builders of 9mm ARs tell people they need to use one of the pricey adapter blocks that can run as high as $200. I, on the other hand, researched the subject by reading 9mm AR discussion forums and found that actual users said the plastic Pro-Mag block ($35-$45) worked as well as the expensive ones. For those who prefer metal blocks I found that the PSA block ($99) was well reviewed. Readers can use which ever they prefer and can afford but I will be using the PSA block on this project and the Pro-Mag block on my next 9mm AR project.

Both the PSA block and the Pro-Mag block slide in from the top of the receiver's magazine well and are retained by the upper receiver when it is closed. My PSA block was very tight fit in the Anderson receiver and I had to sand a little off the front to allow it to fit in the mag well. I actually prefer having to hand-fit parts rather than having parts fit loosely. To allow the adapter block to drop into the magazine well you have to remove the bolt hold open assembly and then re-install it after the block is in place. I forgot this fact otherwise I would have installed the block before I put in the BHO assembly.

DuraCoat is easily applied with a small spray gun or by spray can. Use a facemask and have adequate ventilation when spraying gun finishes.

For a quality finish that the hobbyist can apply LCW DuraCoat was chosen. DuraCoat is available in more than 100 colors. It is available in liquid or aerosol can form.

you need to cycle the action quickly to simulate the speed that the parts would reciprocate during firing. Slow cycling can cause problems that would not exist if running at full speed. When I cycled the action I was please to find that the gun chambered and ejected rounds fine. It even worked when I run it slow. Now that I knew the gun would likely work correctly it was time for live fire testing.

For live fire testing I would be using the same ammo that I had used when testing my carbine project. This was Winchester USA 115-grain FMJ, Federal Aluminum case 115-grain FMJ, and Remington UMC 115-grain FMJ ammo. Since this was function testing I did not bother with installing sights, I just wanted to verify that the gun worked before I applied a final finish or installed sights. I loaded up some ammo in a couple clips and walked out into the driveway and let her rip. Readers should know that I live in the country a quarter mile from the nearest road or neighbor. I can literally stand in the front yard and shoot without bothering anyone. This is one of the benefits of living in rural America. For quick function test I typically just step out of the workshop and shoot a few rounds into the ground. Crude, but effective. During testing I found that the case deflector was causing problems by kicking ejected cases back into the action. Once I removed the deflector all rounds chambered, fired, and ejected fine. The only issue I found was the magazines were a little hard to seat when full since the rounds were pushing up hard on the bolt if it was in the forward position. Since the gun had a bolt hold open on last round feature this wasn't a big problem. If the bolt wasn't back when a magazine was inserted I just had to give it a good hard push to get the magazine catch to engage.

To prevent the SIG-Tac brace from sliding to far onto the buffer tube, a simple spacer was turned on the lathe and then installed between the brace and the tube collar.

Now that I knew the gun was going to work, I needed to decide what sights I would be installing after finish application. My budget was already stretched to the limit so sights needed to be very inexpensive. Fortunately I had just the ticket in my box of surplus optics. A while back a new gun shop opened in a nearby large city and they had some grand opening sales. One of the sale items was BSA 30mm red dot sights for $19.99. This economy grade sight would be perfect for my budget-stressed project. For those readers who ask where they can get sights cheap I say one thing, CDNN Sports. While this particular sight is slightly higher priced than my sale cost, CDNN does offer this and many other inexpensive optical sights for less than $40. I personally have also bought these type of inexpensive red dot sights used at flea markets and

Whether the brace fits over your arm or just rest against it the brace does help stabilize the pistol when firing with one hand. This is very helpful for those like the author who can't stand without one hand on a cane or other support.

Even though it looks like a stock the brace is not a stock. If installed on a pistol and used as designed it is legal. The BATFE says that shouldering the brace redesigns it into a prohibited and illegal short barrel rifle.

gun shows for as little as $15 so if you look hard you should have no trouble getting inexpensive sights for your project. To raise the red dot to a comfortable height I installed an inexpensive riser that I bought from Cheaper than Dirt for only $10.

Because the gun had been built with odd colored parts or parts with no finish I needed to apply a good finish. Some builders take the extremely budget friendly method and just squirt their projects with a can of spray paint. If you use the right paint, this can actually work well. The AR-15 and AK-47 Internet builder's forums are full of reports on decent improvised gun finishes. Because Lauer Custom Weaponry is a big sponsor of my gunsmithing article projects the choice of finish was pretty easy. LCW DuraCoat is an excellent gun finish that can be easily applied by the hobbyist gunsmith. For those wanting an in-depth explanation of the application process, I have covered it in past Firearms News, formerly Shotgun News, articles. The Shotgun News special publication "Shotgun News Gunsmithing Projects" is a 400-plus page book on gunsmithing projects that can be purchased through the store section of the Firearms News website (www.firearmsnews.com). In this publication I cover the application of many of the most popular gun finishes such as hot bluing, Parkerizing, GunKote, and DuraCoat. If you have ever considered doing your own gun finishing this book will help you along quite well.

I had a lot of left over and small quantities of DuraCoat from past projects. Rather than using a cataloged color of DuraCoat I mixed several of my left over colors together for a cheap yet high quality finish. For the majority of the gun this color would be a very dark blue. To make it interesting I decided to add some red high lights.

The red color was a standard DuraCoat color called "Furious Mike". This is a dark red color that is taking a jab at former anti-gun NYC mayor Mike Bloomberg. Bloomberg made a big stink about guns being painted in DuraCoat colors other than typical black so LCW owner Steve Lauer decided to poke the bear with a big sharp stick just to annoy him for complaining about DuraCoat coloring on guns.

After my sprayed-on DuraCoat cured, I assembled my project for the last time. The budget priced project looked and worked just as good as any expensive factory-made 9mm AR-15. The cost savings from improvising parts and making some of my own parts was substantial. The bare gun without sights came in at $356 total. However, because I did not use the $35 Pro-Mag adapter block and used the surplus PSA magazine block I could deduct the $35 I spent on the Pro-Mag block. This dropped my cost down to $321. By utilizing self-made parts, by finding bargain priced parts and doing the work myself I built a 9mm AR-15 for only about $325, this is a real bargain price for a good 9mm AR-15. If readers could search out some better part prices than me they might be able to cut the cost to under $300. The cost for my bargain basement 9mm AR pistol was less than half the cost of my 9MM AR-15 carbine. While your actual project cost may vary from mine, this is a perfect example how hobby gunsmithing can reduce your cost. I know workshop tools are expensive but those tools are quickly paid for in cost savings when you use them to build budget priced projects. I have thousands of dollars' worth of tools in my work shop but those tools have allowed me to put many more thousands of dollars' worth of quality self-made guns into my collection at extremely low cost.

Hobby gunsmithing can allow you to have a gun collection far beyond your income level. If doing a little work to save big bucks sounds good to you why not give hobby gunsmithing a try.

I WANT MOR!

Looking for something more out of a red dot sight? Well you may wish to consider Mako's Mepro MOR which combines a red dot sight with a visible and IR laser.

THE MEPRO MOR OPTICAL SIGHT/LASER SYSTEM

Text and Photos by David M. Fortier

Just as the rifles the Israeli Defense Forces fielded evolved, so have their sighting systems. The crude tangent rear sight with a shallow 'V' notch on the old Kar 98ks was replaced by the Rov've Mittan/FAL's aperture sights. Next the Galil added Tritium night sights which provided a rudimentary means of aiming in lowlight conditions. Eventually, the IDF began exploring optical sights, both magnified and unmagnified. Following the 1982 Israel-Lebanon War the IDF felt future conflicts would be close quarters engagements rather than the traditional open field conflicts of the past. They also recognized the need for a seamless transition from daylight to nighttime capability on a single mission. Based upon the lessons learned during this timeframe they developed a number of optical sights they felt were better suited to modern urban combat than conventional iron sights. These greatly improved the combat performance and survivability of the IDF soldier on the modern battlefield.

ITL Optronic's MARS

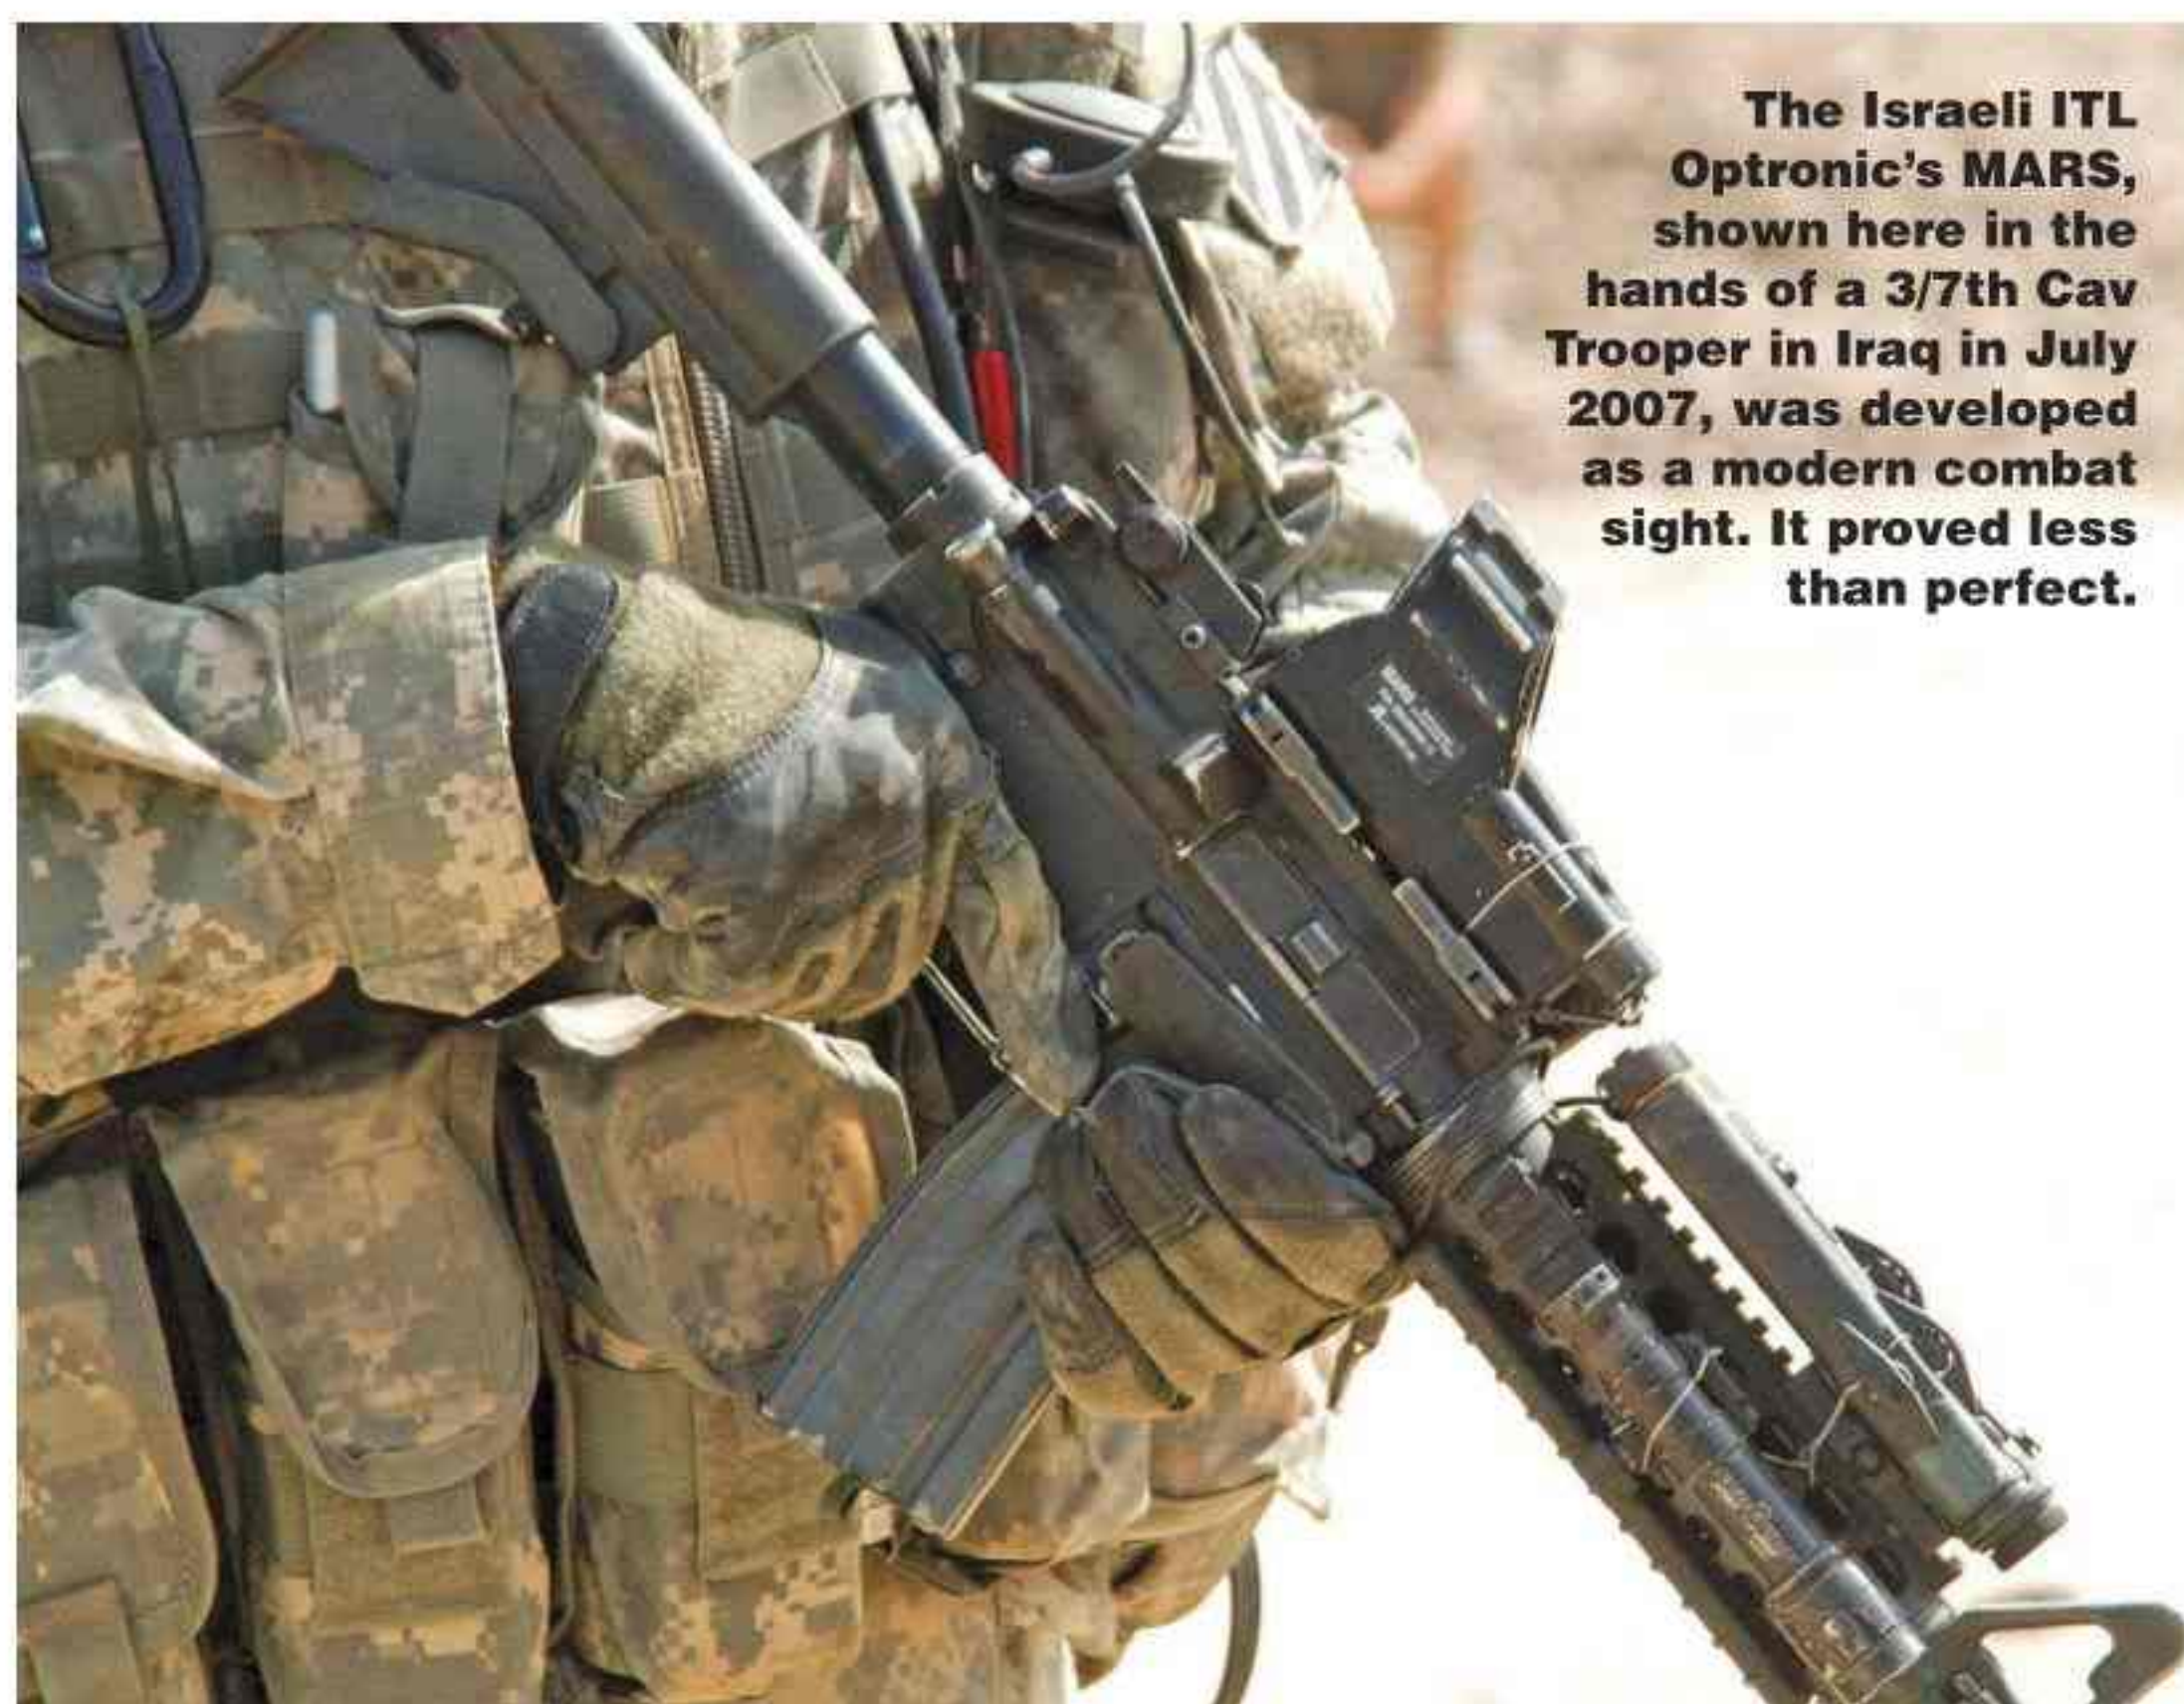

My practical introduction to Israeli optical sights came in Iraq by way of ITL Optronic's Multi-purpose Aiming Reflex Sight or MARS. Back in 2006/2007 this optical sight, among others, was issued to troopers of the 3rd Squadron, 7th US Cavalry Regiment. I had a chance to observe its performance, alongside Aimpoint, EOTech and Trijicon optical sights, in the hands of American combat troops. I have to say the thought of Christian American troops fighting radical Muslims using Jewish built optics named after the pagan Roman god of war was, to the troops, somewhat amusing.

If you are unfamiliar with it, the MARS was developed by ITL as a modern optical gunsight. It is a large non-magnified reflex sight that looks somewhat like a EOTech HWS in profile. The unit is 1.8x2.9x5.1 inches, weighs about a pound and mounts easily to a MIL STD 1913 rail via two horizontally rotating throw levers. The main power switch has five positions, including one night vision setting, and the sight incorporates an automatic brightness control. Power is provided by a single 1.5 volt AA battery that lasts for approximately 200 hours of use.

In addition to the normal reflex sight, the MARS also incorporates an infrared (IR) laser. Output of the Class 1 IR laser is 0.4 mW. As an option a visible red laser may be substituted for the IR laser. A pressure switch, which can be mounted onto the weapon's forearm or vertical grip, is provided for activating the laser. Zeroing is simplified by having a single adjustment for both the laser and red dot sight. This is a big deal and one of the nice features about this sight.

While very forward thinking, the MARS did have its faults. Size wise it is fairly bulky and it weighed some 16 ounces. When mounted onto an M4 carbine it sits too high to even allow use of a BUIS. The field of view it offers is also narrower than you'd expect and there was a noticeable tint to the image. The biggest gripe, however, was the very short battery life. Due to these reasons it was not particularly popular among the troops I spoke with who carried it in combat. Although numbers were fielded in combat by both the US Army and USMC, today the MARS is little known by most American shooters.

The Israeli ITL Optronic's MARS, shown here in the hands of a 3/7th Cav Trooper in Iraq in July 2007, was developed as a modern combat sight. It proved less than perfect.

The Mako Group distributes Meprolight optics, like this Mepro 21 seen here mounted onto a Tavor, in the US.

Meprolight

In the almost decade since I first handled a MARS I've had the opportunity to test a variety of modern Israeli optical sights. The latest one is the Mepro MOR which is marketed in the US by the Mako Group. The Mako Group is headquartered in Farmingdale, N.Y., and manufactures and distributes a wide range of weapon accessories, combat optics, holsters and EOD breaching products. One of the companies they distribute in the US is Meprolight. While not very well known in the United States, Meprolight is an Electro-Optics company producing systems for professional use by infantry, armed forces, LE agencies as well as civilians since 1990. Here in the US they are perhaps best known for their Tritium self-illuminated night sights. However they produce much more than just fancy iron sights. They also design and manufacture electro-optical sights and devices, uncooled thermal weapon sights, night vision devices and sights, laser rangefinders and fire control systems. Their products are fully certified to ISO-9001:2008, complying with NATO and US military specifications and International MIL Standards.

Meprolight is a recognized leader in tritium night sights and are known for their Mepro 21, a day/night illuminated reflex sight. This optic is currently standard issue with the IDF, so it is a professional piece of military equipment. The reticle is illuminated by fiber optic/Tritium. As it requires no batteries or outside electrical power source it appeals to many who prefer simple solutions. In many respects it is rather old school, and it lacks any bells or whistles. I feel the Mepro 21 has a few disadvantages, particularly a dimly illuminated aiming point which can be very hard to see in certain light conditions.

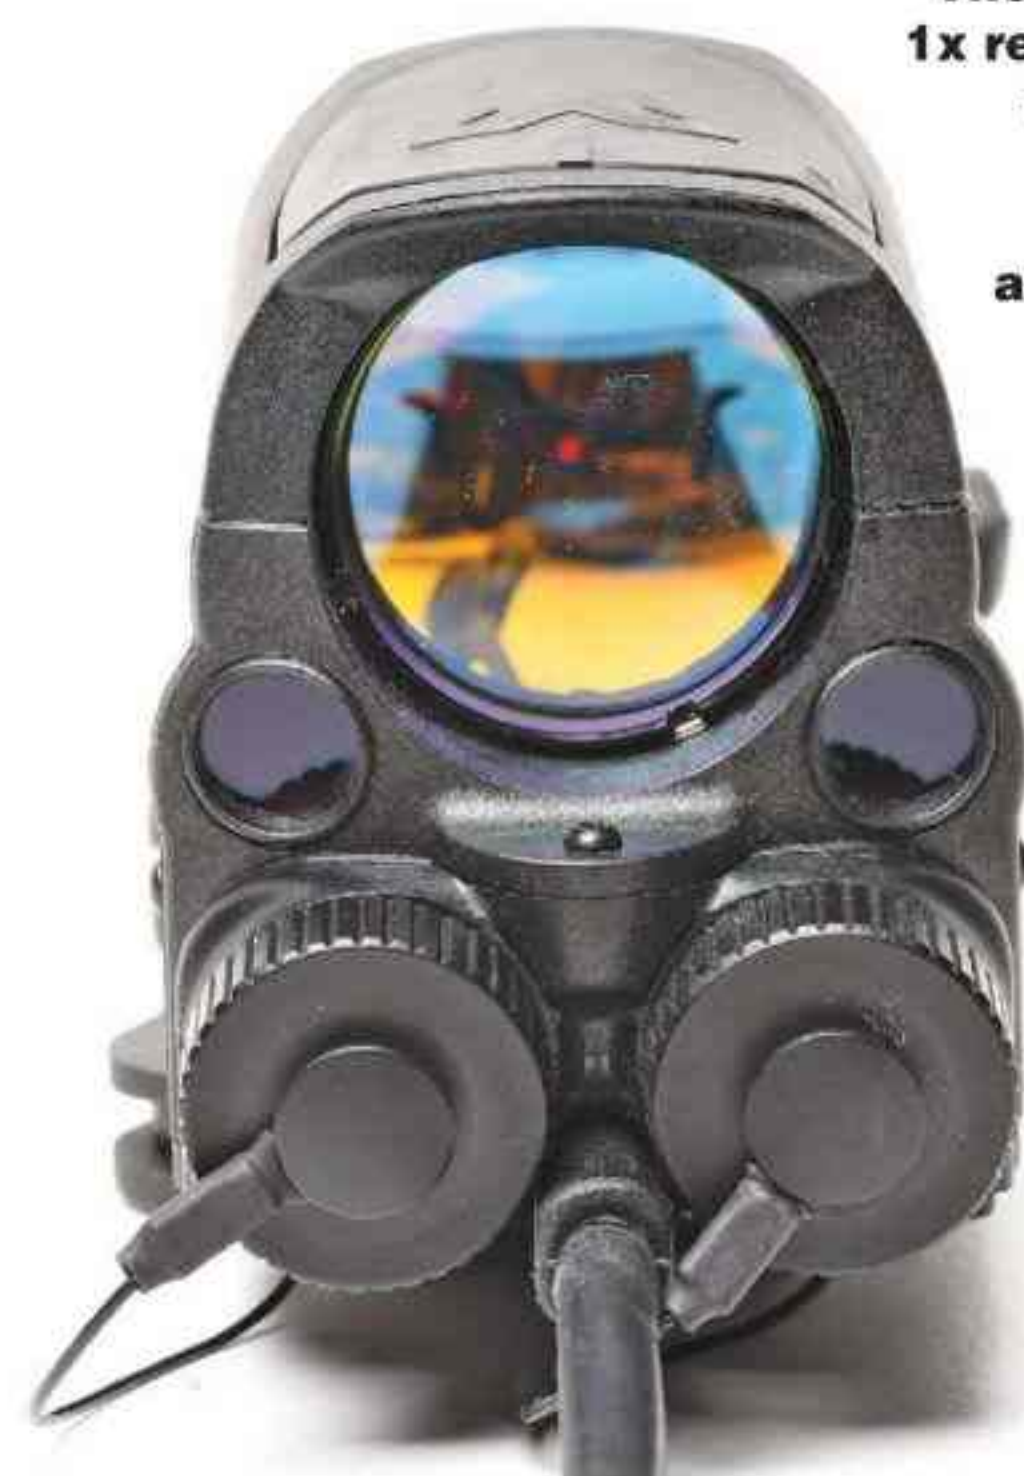

Mepro MOR

The Mepro MOR was developed by Meprolight at the request of the IDF as a replacement for the MARS. As such it shares some features with the MARS and is an unmagnified optic providing a true 1x. The Mepro MOR is approximately 5.8 inches long, 2.3 inches wide and 2.8 inches tall. It weighs a hefty 15.8 ounces. To allow rapid installation/removal it features a dual throw lever mounting system, which adds some weight. The foundation of the sight is a robust polymer body. The advanced polymer material used in the construction of the MOR makes it scratch and shock resistant in addition to being submersible in water. The protected 30mm lens is coated and displays a noticeable greenish blue tint in the field of view. The objective side displays a mirror coating.

What is noteworthy about the Mepro MOR is how it is powered. The reticle is illuminated by three sources, fiber optics, tritium and a battery power supply. When sufficient ambient light is available the aiming point is illuminated by a fiber optic collector system. In situations where there is little or no ambient light available, the aiming point is illuminated by a tiny tritium lamp. In gaseous form, tritium (Hydrogen-3) is a radioactive material which does not require a power source. The tritium illumination is warranted for 10 years and it should remain usable for 13-14 years. Transitioning between fiber optics and Tritium is automatic with no time delay and no switches or levers to move or adjust. If the rifleman desires a brighter reticle than either the fiber optic collector or tritium lamp can provide, he can activate a powered LED enhancer. The Mepro MOR is intended to allow a rifleman to engage targets during the day using the fiber optic system and at night, or with night vision, with the tritium lamp. No batteries required. If he desires a brighter aiming point he can switch to battery power.

The Mepro MOR features two separate and sealed storage compartments at the front of the body. Each one

The Mepro MOR is a 1x reflex sight with a 30mm lens. Also note the Visible and IR lasers above the battery compartments.

The Mepro MOR is built using a polymer body and features a power switch with six settings on the left side.

The design features two QD throw levers which facilitate quick mounting and removal of the sight.

Located at the top rear of the body is a fiber optic light collector for use in bright light conditions. A tritium lamp allows use in low light and a battery powered LED is also available.

A look at the Mepro MOR's mounting system and locking levers.

damage they are recessed to prevent them from catching on anything. They feature one large slot to allow their adjustment using a coin, cartridge case or flat head screwdriver. Each click moves the point of impact .5 Mil at 100 meters. Please note the adjusters move not only the reticle, but also the visible and IR laser simultaneously. So, rather than having to monotonously zero each separately, they all feature a centralized control. This greatly simplifies zeroing the sight.

How well does the Mepro MOR's three types of reticle illumination perform? Let's start with the fiber optics. Standing outside in bright daylight with the battery power switched off, you will find your reticle clearly illuminated. However, different lighting situations can be problematic. Remember with the battery off, it operates by either gathering ambient light through fiber optics or by illuminating the reticle via a tritium lamp if no light is available. Keep in mind the tritium lamp is only bright enough to faintly illuminate the reticle in low light conditions.

What does this mean? In situations where the sight is in a dark environment and the target is in a bright environment the reticle can be very difficult to discern. Such a situation would be if the sight was located indoors and the target was outside in bright daylight, such as shooting out a window or doorway. Another scenario would be if the sight was located in the dark and the target was brightly illuminated by a weapon's light (like in a dark hallway at night). If you spend time with the Mepro MOR you will encounter situations where you are hard pressed to discern the reticle with the battery turned off. This is not confined to the Mepro MOR alone but is endemic to all sights that rely on fiber optics and tritium for illumination. Unlike most other designs, with the Mepro MOR you simply flip a switch and swap to the battery powered LED. With the LED on the reticle is bright and easy to see with three different intensity levels.

The Mepro MOR sample I tested came fitted with their bull's eye reticle. Inside 100 meters the bullseye reticle worked well. It works especially well inside 25m accepts a 1.5-volt AA battery. It should be noted that the Mepro MOR's power system was designed with Murphy in mind. Basically while it has two battery compartments and accepts two AA batteries, it will run off a single AA from either battery compartment. If one battery dies or fails, the Mepro MOR automatically switches to the second battery. Power is controlled by a lever on the left side of the unit. All the way forward is OFF, followed by three levels of intensity for the reticle, visible laser and IR laser. Two reticles are currently offered, a 4.3 MOA dot or a bulls eye that features a dot inside of a segmented circle. Rather than being the conventional red color normally associated with red dot sights, the Mepro MOR's reticle is actually yellow.

As the Mepro MOR was developed for modern infantry use, it offers more than just a 1x reflex sight. The design also incorporates an integral visible laser built into the polymer body. Plus, it is also available with not only the visible laser but also an IR laser for use with night vision devices. So in one unit a rifleman can have a 1x reflex sight, visible aiming laser and IR aiming laser. No separate items need to be added to his rifle. Power wise, my sample was marked Class 3R laser product <5mW at 650 nm. The lasers are controlled by a non-removable tethered pressure switch jutting from the front of the body. This can be mounted to the handguard of an AR-15 or other rifle, but is designed to fit inside the Tavor's handguard. The Tavor's handguard features a special button cutout for concealment of the tether cable and allows for flush mounting the switch on the left side of the front handguard.

While you would not expect it, zeroing the sight and both lasers is very simple. The windage and elevation adjusters are located at the rear of the body. To prevent and on moving targets due to its size. It's quite big and really stands out with the battery powered LED on. Past 100 meters though I felt it blocked too much of the target. Due to its size it's difficult to be precise at distance and frankly not to my liking. I would prefer a simple dot, which they also offer. Remember though, there is a reason for the size of this reticle. The strongpoint of the bullseye reticle is its large enough to still discern when the illumination is faint, and it's quick to pick up at speed when the distances are close.

I found the Mepro MOR to be on the large side, and heavy. Also be aware the Mepro MOR sits too high on an AR15 for an effective co-witness with the iron sights. The tops of the iron sights are barely visible above bottom of the lens. However the lasers worked well and add significantly to the capabilities of this unit. Properly utilized, an IR laser teamed with a night vision monocular can be extremely effective at night. The downside is the lasers also add to the price of the unit. The MSRP for the sight with visible laser is $1,285.70 while the model with visible and IR laser retails for $1,660.10. That's a big chunk of change until you consider how much a separate military grade weapon mounted visible/IR laser device costs. If you look at it in that light the Mepro MOR doesn't seem quite so expensive. All in all I liked the Mepro MOR. While not perfect, it's simple to use, tough and effective. FN

A pressure switch activates the lasers. This can be mounted to the fore-end of your rifle to make it readily accessible.

NEWS FROM AROUND THE FIREARMS INDUSTRY

OBAMA TO IMPOSE HIS WILL ON GUN OWNERS

As of this writing, President Obama is ramping up his rhetoric on guns and becoming even more transparent in his disdain for them. Early in January, in a speech that appealed more to the emotions than logic, Obama laid out plans to expand background checks and make buying and selling guns between law-abiding citizens more difficult. He called for those "in the business" of selling guns to require a check for prospective buyers. This could be as far-reaching as a widow wanting to sell her late husband's deer rifle to a neighbor, which is lunacy. The FBI will also hire 230 more examiners to process background checks.

Obama's actions should have little chance of becoming law (after all, Congress makes laws, not an egomaniacal president) but the point is this: the gunbanners, including our desperate president, are throwing as much crap at the wall as possible, hoping that some of it will stick. It's our job as responsibly armed citizens to be diligent in ensuring that the wall remains crap free.

SMITH & WESSON/APEX TACTICAL

BEEF RESOLVED

Late last year, Smith & Wesson got into hot water when it announced a lawsuit against Apex Tactical and other companies, most notably Brownell's, for their collaboration on a M&P pistol that was modified to showcase the "Brownell's Dream Gun" that the five companies in question had put together. After word of the suit came to light, the gun-buying public threw a collective fit and many let Smith & Wesson know of their outrage. In the suit, Smith & Wesson demanded that Apex et al not ever showcase the pistol, cease sales of modified S&W guns and—here's the kicker—turn over all inventory of modified guns ("infringing product") to S&W.

This was seen as S&W bullying small companies and infringing upon the free market. Due in no small part to the outrage from the public, S&W has since retracted its suit and issued a "my bad" statement that basically says the whole thing was a misunderstanding. Support for Apex and the other companies involved has skyrocketed since the debacle.

POUR YOUR OWN 'GHOST GUN'

A company called Gun Mold is releasing a mold that will allow you to "pour" your own polymer AR-15 lower with no FFL required. It's called the Phantom 15, and is said to be a complete, functioning lower receiver that's even threaded to accept a buffer tube. Because there is no metal in the lower, the plastic is extra thick in high-stress points and has a permanent pistol grip and triggerguard for added strength. Check out www.gunmold.com for more information.

RUGER RELEASES MOST AMERICAN PISTOL YET

Ruger is off to an exciting 2016 already as the company introduces its newest striker-fired, polymer-framed pistol, the Ruger American pistol. The American is steeped in American ingenuity and pride. It's designed and manufactured right here by English-speaking designers and engineers. It's offered in both 9mm and .45 ACP—what thoroughbred American fighting pistol wouldn't be offered in America's favorite big-bore caliber? It's designed to go toe-to-toe with a certain brand of pistols that claim perfection, and when I spoke to Guns & Ammo Editor Eric Poole about the Ruger American, he says the American has a leg up in a few key categories.

You don't need to pull the trigger to take the American down, and its low bore axis coupled with a recoil-reducing barrel cam and low-mass slide reduce felt recoil, making follow-up shots and double taps quicker and more accurate. The trigger stands above many striker-fired triggers with its short takeup and obvious reset. The sights are genuine Novak three-dot and all the critical controls are bi-lateral (some might say ambidextrous). And rather than removable grip panels or palm-swells, a modular wrap-around grip system is employed to give the gun three distinct sizes and feels. For more, read about the new Ruger American in the current issue of Guns & Ammo or at www.ruger.com.

STAG ARMS®

STAG ARMS UNDER FIRE

FOR BOOKKEEPING

Recently Stag Arms, the New Britain, Conn., maker of AR-15 rifles and pistols, came into hot water over apparent record-keeping issues during production and compliance with ATF manufacturing regulations. The ATF threatened to revoke Stag's FFL, a deadly blow to a manufacturer. The ATF has since levied fines on the company and its founder, Mark Malkowski, but Malkowski has worked out a deal with the ATF to sell the company to a private third party in order to keep the doors open and the FFL intact. www.stagarms.com

LASERMAX'S NEW GLOCK 42/43 LASER

Got a new Glock 42 or 43? Many folks do, and they also have an accompanying holster. If you'd like to outfit your gun with a laser and want to continue using your favorite holster, LaserMax's guide rod laser is just for you.

Put any fears of making your gun less reliable aside; these lasers are bred of the DNA that's been in service overseas for years. If it's good enough for our guys in uniform, it's good enough for you. LaserMax's Marketing and Training Coordinator, Joseph D'Ambrosia, used one he bought on his own while deployed in the sandbox before he came onboard LaserMax. www.lasermax.com

MORE NONSENSE FROM NEW YORK

Senator Roxanne Persaud (D-19) and Assemblywoman Jo Anne Simon (D-52) are breathing life back into part of the failed SAFE Act. The original SAFE Act planned to implement a background check requirement for ammunition purchases, and this new legislation proposes that ammo purchases be limited to twice the capacity of a firearm in a 90-day period. Isn't there more important things going on in New York than hassling folks about how much ammo they can buy?

FIREARMS NEWS SURVIVAL SHOOTING SERIES

PART 1: SELF-DEFENSE WITH FIREARMS —IT'S ABOUT MORE THAN THE GUN

By John M. Peterson III

Editor's note: The Firearms News Survival Shooting Series intends to aid our readers to establish or improve their self-defense capability and tactical shooting proficiency with their firearms. We'll take you from A to Z and cover all or most of the bases for handgun, rifle, and shotgun, with a natural progression of topics to include techniques, tactics, and the training that you need to master them.

Instructor John Peterson discusses as the next installment in this series, what can happen in a real gunfight and what you may want to consider when choosing a self-defense firearm. Before heading to the websites or store to make your next purchase, let's look at what you need to know.

Whether primarily for sporting purposes or self-defense, most all of you must have given some thought as to how suitable your firearm(s) are for a situation where you may have to fight for your life. Though many may rely on the brand, model, manufacturer's reputation and of course, the expertise of gun writers, instructors, online groups, and knowing friends to help make our purchasing decisions, there are some additional factors to consider in a purchase that may have an impact on your success and survival if you have to go toe-to-toe with an assailant. A life and death situation. A gunfight.

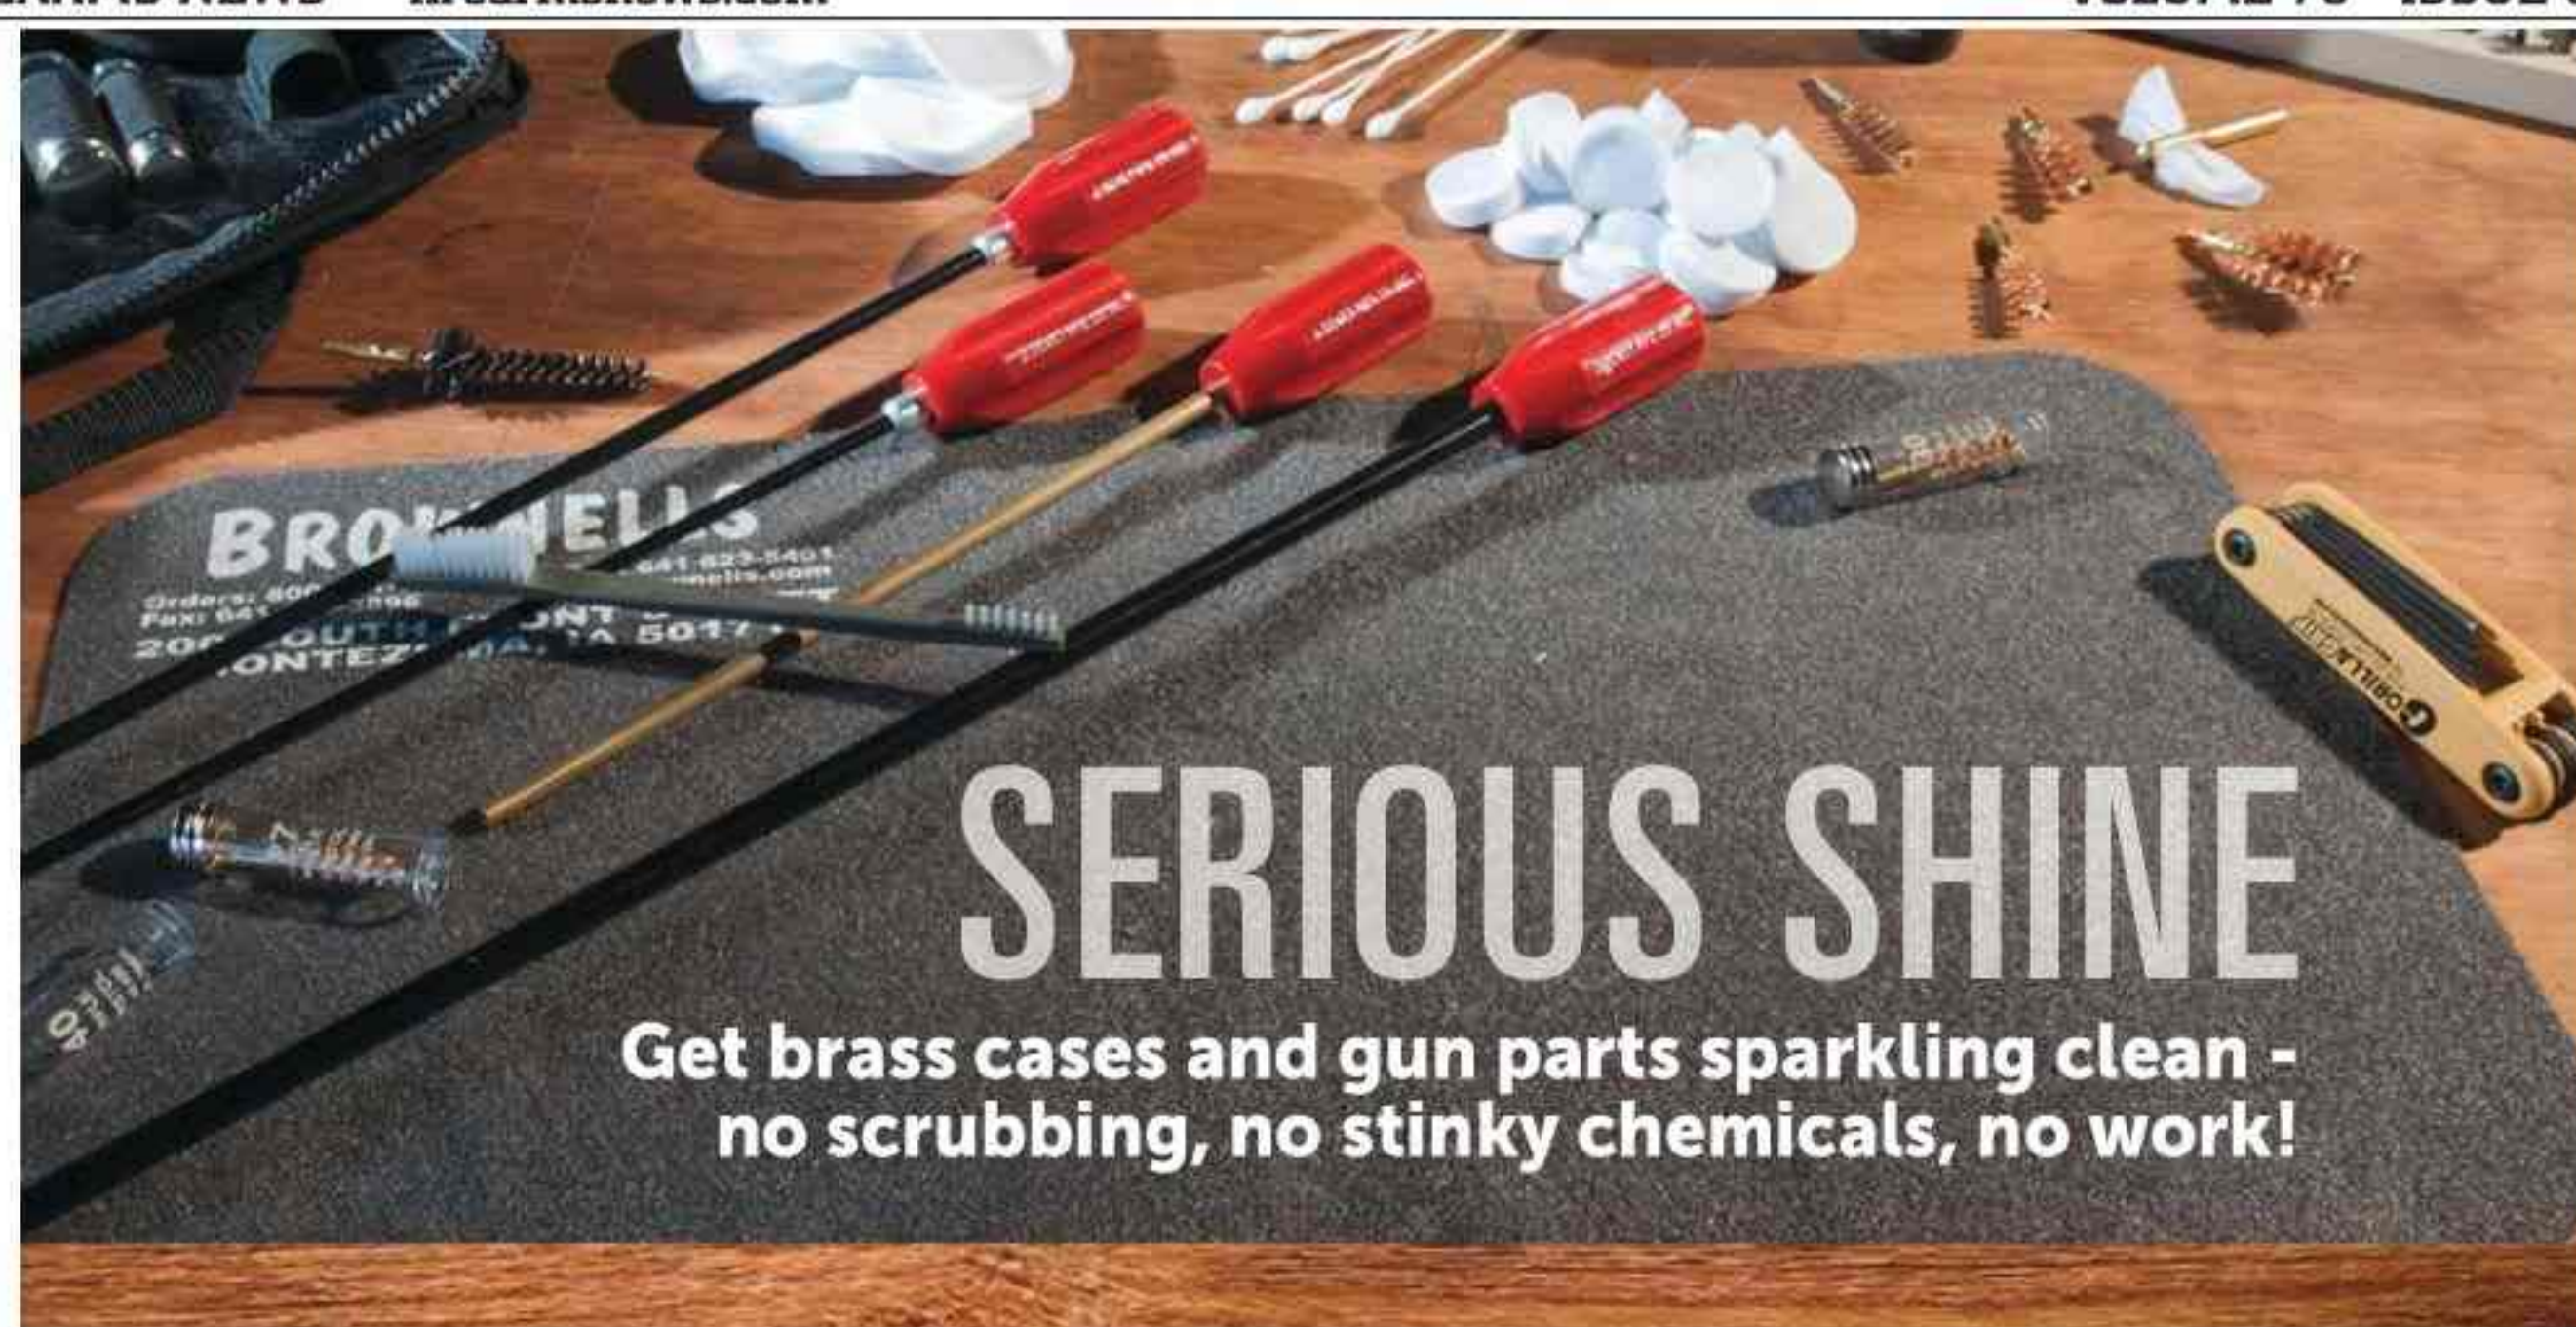

Though many lives have been saved with a simple plinking or sporting firearm, this is not something that you can let go to chance. Each year, more than 2 million of our fellow citizens find themselves in a life-or-death situation where there is defensive firearms use. Most of these are resolved by presenting drawing, but not discharging, their firearm. Add to this the rise of mass shootings, to include terrorist attacks. Many of these potential assailants will have training and/or be heavily armed. And more of the "good guys," mindful of all of this and that it could be a possibility, are deciding to either buy a rifle, shotgun, or handgun or upgrade what they have.

Upon reading this, then please ask yourself: does my firearm's design, ammunition & accessories, added to my proficiency and survival mindset, all have what it takes to ensure that I survive and win in a gunfight?

Before heading to the websites or store to make your next purchase, let's look at what you need to know and consider. The most accomplished and high risk organizations in law enforcement and the military study what is written about here. Armed confrontations are nothing like the easy day at the range during a sight in or plinking, and many have found it to be quite a horrific, life-changing event. We'll give you a breakdown of what you might face.

Dynamics of a gunfight—variables that you should expect to face in an armed confrontation

- TIME: It could be quick. Most gunfights begin and end in a matter of seconds
- DISTANCE: It could be close. The majority of armed encounters (and fatalities of victims) occurred within 12 yards, with most of those within 6 feet. Your firearm needs to have features and superior [Cont. to page 59] handling not for a 500-yard shot, but for close quarters gun battle. Consider equipping for a situation where the threat may be within room distance, out to the range of an average hallway, yard, or parking garage interior.

- COVER: Most people who are shot, are shot in the open and standing still. That should have an impact on your training for an event. Learn how to quickly use and select cover, with or without a firearm.
- LIGHT: In the dark of night. A large percentage of violent crimes occur in low light conditions, or those where there might not be sufficient light to determine what the threat is, such as seeing whether or not an intruder is armed. This means having a means to aim and get a sight picture to get those rounds on target. Will you be able to even see the particular sights that you have chosen for your firearm? But before that, and because we must be justified in our decision, that also means having high powered, hand-held or weapon-mounted tactical light to assist in making proper threat identification. At least carry a high intensity tactical flashlight of 100 lumens output or more.

As you'll read throughout this series, training is paramount to being truly prepared for an armed encounter.

- WOLFPACKS: Up to half of all attacks on persons, to include carjackings and terrorist attacks, involve two or more attackers. This may mean having a firearm that can move to and fire quickly enough for not just multiple bad guys coming at you.
- WHERE FROM: The assailants may come from multiple directions, and/or angles, and at different times. Two of the most famous killings of master gunfighters took place from behind them. Assailants could try to out-flank you, or an additional attacker may be a lookout or hiding somewhere. Especially in an urban environment, they could appear from above, below, or behind you and from concealed locations. Some home invasions typically involve teams with individual responsibilities and locations. Making it worse, they may present different levels of force and threat. An example would be the initial actor using a ruse or other trickery to get close to you, another with a blunt instrument such as a baseball bat or piece of metal pipe, while further away is the one with a lethal weapon. This means that you have to have a defensive firearms package that can help you to quickly identify and move quickly to engage (or not) these persons in rapid order.

For over 25 years, Adcor Industries has been a national defense contract supplier and it is one of the few firearm manufacturers in the country that are certified to quality standard AS9100. We build 9 of the critical components for the Trident missile system, radar system components for the F-16 Fighter, and other components for the U.S. military small arms industrial base. With its diverse manufacturing capabilities and expertise as a defense industry supplier, Adcor was in an ideal position to design and build its own unique version of the M4 automatic rifle. Adcor Defense, Inc. was formed for that purpose. The product of years of hands-on experience and experimentation, the ADCOR A-556 ELITE™ is not a "new and improved" rifle. It has a patented (Patent # 8,210,089) revolutionary gas piston system and other key patented features that set it apart from all other M4-type rifles. All components for the ADCOR A-556 ELITE™ are manufactured in the U.S.A. and it is built in the Adcor Defense factory in Baltimore, Maryland. Accuracy. Innovation. Reliability. We invite you to examine the ADCOR A-556 ELITE™. We are certain you will find our enhancements to your liking.

- FAILURE TO STOP: An increasing number of criminals and terrorists are showing up wearing body armor and/or under the influence of drugs. Whether your shot placement and/or ammunition's capability for terminal ballistics performance is sufficient or not, it could require 2, 5, or even 10 rounds to stop a single attacker. Now multiply that possibility by the number of assailants. A reliable, clean, higher capacity firearm that can fire quickly is the order of the day. You don't have to use it all, but you'll be sure glad that you had extra ammunition should the need ever arise. And always have spare, loaded ammunition.
- THERE MAY ALREADY BE INJURIES AS WELL AS DEATH ALL AROUND YOU—You might already be wounded, to include bleeding or down on the ground when the show starts. Your justification to shoot may be that where attacked from behind and by surprise, thereby already being injured before you even can access your firearm. Imagine your hands being covered in blood or the attacker's sweat before you even access your firearm. Is the gripping surface of your gun too smooth to handle it for rapid multiple shots or even at all?

Having a reliable weapon is critical to giving yourself the best chance at surviving a life-or-death situation.

- GUNFIGHT SIGHTS, SOUNDS, AND SENSATIONS: Muzzle flashes and the sound of weapons firing without hearing protection, especially in a darkened or enclosed environment, physical pain of being already shot or injured, the screams of wounded victims, and the exertion of a physical confrontation or running gun battle can be challenging to deal with at the least, and overwhelming at worst.
- THE RANGE FEELS NOTHING LIKE THE REAL DEAL: In addition to the gunfight variables listed above, there is a dramatic difference between how we may act when at a non-threatening shooting range versus a life-and-death situation. From birth, we are equipped with certain capabilities that hard-wire us for survival, as well as possible reactions when we run into a fight-or-flight situation. Some of these can be good for us, and harnessed to our advantage, while others can impede us from dealing with an armed confrontation. Some of these can be extremely costly if you are not aware of them. It is essential to not just know these, but also consider how they will have an effect on your firearms design and ability to use it.

In the next installment, we'll get into what your body and mind might do in a gunfight.

HOW AND WHY AIRGUNS CHANGE OVER TIME

By Tom Gaylord

They Don't Make 'Em Like They Used To

Ain't that the truth? Nothing is the same anymore. Usually when people talk about this subject they only remember the good things from the past and focus on the things of today that they don't like. In the airgun category they remember blued steel and walnut stocks. They remember airguns that were made the same way firearms were made, and that they both looked and felt the same. But a lot of facts are edited out.

Before 1970, an airgun that could achieve 800 feet per second (fps) velocity was considered a magnum. Today, the same gun would be a youth model, or at best an adult plinker. Today's airguns top 1,000 fps regularly. The fastest exceed 1,400 fps.

Prior to 1990, 50 yards was considered the maximum distance an airgun could shoot with accuracy, and even then they could not keep 10 shots in a group of less than about two inches. Today there are airguns that will put 10 pellets in 3/8 inch at 50 yards and less than one inch at 100 yards. Airgunners today are shooting to 200, 300 and even 400 yards.

Are Today's Airguns Better?

We have powerplants today that eclipse the best guns of 50 years ago, and today's pellets will make even the old guns more accurate—to say nothing of what they will do in a modern platform.

The traditionalist insists that a modern airgun is no good because its metal is matte black or even painted. Today's stocks are either made from nondescript hardwood with no grain or worse—synthetics. Compared to the best guns of the past, the modern guns suffer.

So, who is right? Are today's airguns better, or have we passed through the Golden Age on our way to tracer burnout? And what things need to change, to return to what people believe was the best?

Several factors drive change. These are listed in no particular order and their significance increases or decreases with changing circumstances.

1. Technology—Back Then

The first change driver is technology. Airguns of the past were made on manual production machinery like lathes and mills. They were designed to suit that machinery. Tolerances were held as close as possible without spending too much time so costs didn't rise too high. Labor was cheap in comparison to the large capital expenditures needed for production machinery. And the time it took to set up those machines to run a job was time they weren't producing, so designs took that into account.

What resulted were designs that changed very little over time. Airguns shared [Cont. to page 63]

BSF S54 underlever was a fine air rifle for the 1950s. But it tops out at 650 fps in .177 caliber and although it was designed for targets it isn't that accurate.

The tolerances held by the machines tended to change over time as their cutting tools wore out. So, hand fitting was necessary to assemble the guns. The person doing the assembly was also helping check for finish flaws, which improved the final result.

Both wood and steel finishes have evolved greatly with time. In the past, bluing—which usually meant applying a process called black oxide—was the number one way to finish steel. This finish is thin, tough and tends to show any marks left on the metal, so more hand finishing was done to correct it.

Wood finishes of the past were those that had existed for hundreds of years. They were oil-based and soaked into the wood grain where they achieved good depth.

Technology—Now

Today we have single machines that can do many times more machining jobs on a part than in the past. They are driven by computers, so changing the design during production doesn't impact the schedule like it once did. Software does the changing and once the tools are loaded and the system is checked, the computer takes over. These same machines can change their tooling automatically when they detect wear, so the tolerances they maintain are much closer than in the past. Far less hand fitting is required during assembly. In fact less human involvement of any kind is necessary.

Hand finishing is becoming a thing of the past. The tools of today leave smoother finishes than in the past and automated finishing processes take over from there. Of course the mirror finish on steel is no longer achieved, but the material is often a metal other than steel anyway. And the finishes that are applied are in-step with the rest of the manufacturing processes.

Wood finishes are now sprayed on in topical coats. Or the stocks are dipped in special vats containing the finish.

Modern manufacturing uses materials like aluminum and engineering plastics in applications where they are best suited. Many times shooters complain, but if they look at law enforcement and military firearms, they have been moving in the same direction for decades. This is a fact of life in the 21st century. And it's always possible to get a job done by hand using the classic materials, but the price is steep. Little red wagons are not often made of steel anymore!

Molybdenum disulfide, or moly for short, is a high-tech lubricant that reduces friction and adheres to the material it's applied to. It has been the lubricant of choice for custom tuners for decades. Now we are starting to see manufacturers use it on their new guns.

Buna O-rings have been used to seal CO₂ guns since they were first introduced in the 1940s. Today we see manufacturers looking at more advanced materials for their dynamic seals like O-rings. Things like durometer ratings of O-rings and other seal materials that were once just a specification are now being applied to make modern gas guns virtually leak-proof.

2. Understanding the Principles—Back Then

As time passed, our understanding of how airguns function has increased. In the past manufacturers were content just to get airguns to work. Guns that didn't leak when fired and guns that were both safe and reliable were the goal. Velocity and accuracy were secondary in the past.

Understanding the Principles—Now

Today we know much more about what makes an airgun work than ever before. We know that a piston with a long stroke will generate greater power than one that is shorter. We understand that the tightness of fit at the breech of a break-barrel spring rifle is paramount [Cont. to page 64]

German Diana 34P is a best-selling modern spring rifle. The metal is matte and the stock is synthetic, and it will put 10 pellets into one inch at 50 yards.

SHOOT MORE SPEND LESS

Stay proficient with airguns! Spend less on ammo and choose from countless firearm replicas. Whether you're for a gun for target practice or to hunt up to deer-sized game, we have the right airgun for you.

If it's in stock today, you'll get it tomorrow.

PYRAMYDAIR.COM

HOW AND WHY AIRGUNS CHANGE OVER TIME

[Cont. from page 63] to accuracy. We understand that the fit of the piston seal to the compression chamber, and the size and length of the air transfer port have a huge impact on how an airgun performs. And that's just the beginning.

We now know how to remove almost all of the wasteful vibration of a spring gun powerplant—turning it into more power with a smoother shot cycle as a benefit. Twenty years ago things like tight-fitting spring guides and buttoned pistons were the bread and butter of custom tuners, but today we see them being built right into the airguns at the factory! What's more—modern manufacturers are using advanced materials to enhance the products they make.

And pneumatic guns are taking off like a rocket—pardon the pun! Things as simple as barrel length are now understood to boost power in guns with no additional investment or changes. Valve timing, de-bounce devices (to let the valve stay closed when the gun fires) and balanced striker springs to lower fill pressures are all advancing the world of the pneumatic airgun. Yes, technology has advanced the modern airgun greatly.

3. Company Staff and Leadership —Back Then

In the past airgun companies had workers who spent their entire lives with the same company. They were lead by managers who emerged from the same workforce. To say the people in such companies lived and breathed airguns is not an exaggeration.

Company Staff and Leadership—Now

Today's companies are often staffed with professional businessmen and women. They understand the financial side of the operation quite well, but often they are not shooters and do not understand nor use the products they make. Consequently business decisions are made using only the information they do understand—creating a company that's run by a spreadsheet.

Workers are very transient today. Often they don't come from the same industry and are trained on the job by those who preceded them—the blind leading the blind.

Boards of directors are only interested in the bottom line—not in the future health of the company. They press for and often get short-term solutions. Success this year may end a 100-year-old company next year.

A few airgun companies are staffed with people who truly understand and appreciate airguns. These are the companies that bring the lion's share of innovation to market.

4. Market Trends—Then and Now

You might think that the consumer dictates what comes to market, and if we were talking about cars, movies or television programs you'd be right. But the airgun market is so narrow, even within the shooting sports, that customers are often the last people to be heard. Fortunately there is a strong base of boutique makers at the grass-roots level who turn out the guns and products they know serious airgunners want. Smart companies spend time on the chat forums, looking at what's being discussed. But the chat forums are home to less than one percent of all the airgun buyers.

The USFT rifle is made in low numbers by Mac-1 Airguns. It takes a 1,650 psi fill and gets 55 powerful shots that will all hit a quarter at 50 yards. This rifle breaks new ground in several pneumatic principles.

HOW AND WHY AIRGUNS CHANGE OVER TIME

MOST AIRGUN BUYERS KNOW LITTLE OR NOTHING ABOUT AIRGUNS.

You will notice I'm discussing this topic all together—no past and present. That's because little has changed in the world of airgun consumers for the past 100 years. Accuracy has been displaced by velocity as the primary sales feature, but that is because of the low cost of a chronograph. And the paramilitary look is in, not because buyers want it as much as it's one of the few things a modern staffer with no shooting experience identifies with. If it looks like a gun to them, they reason, it must be right. And most of the time, they are right, because buyers often know as little about guns as the staff members.

Summary

I have told you a lot about how and why modern airguns got to be the way that they are. In several cases I haven't said what can be done about it. That's because this is a hard market to understand and an even harder one to crack. At least now you have some insight into why "they" don't always do the things you think they should.

Sinclair/L.E. Wilson Ultimate Trimmer

The Ultimate Trimmer helps you control a critical factor in cartridge-to-cartridge consistency: trim length. A group of cartridges with cases trimmed to the exact same length is likely to perform more consistently.

- Ensures identical trim length from one case to next
- Lets you trim cases to exact length for your rifle's chamber
- Hand-crank mechanism is easy to use, yet extremely accurate
- Micrometer head gives precise, "actual" trim-length settings in .001" increments
- Easily handles cases from .22 Hornet to .416 Rigby

A CHARGING HANDLE FOR THE 21ST CENTURY GUNFIGHTER! BCMGUNFIGHTER CHARGING HANDLE

BCMGUNFIGHTER™ Charging Handles feature internal redesigns to direct the force off of the weakest part of the system, the roll pin, and into the body of the charging handle during support hand only manipulations. This new design has a built in "backstop" engineered into the charging handle. As the latch is opened, its travel is limited by these flat surface backstops. With this travel limiting feature, the shooter has a stronger system and a smoother operation.

Fine Firearms Go Full Auto: The Stemple Takedown Guns

These pre-1986 transferable machine guns are in limited supply.
Get One While They Last!

The Stemple Takedown Gun Universal 9 (STG-U9) is the mainstay of our U Series setups for the Stemple 76/45 machine gun. The simple, durable, smooth running blowback system delivers the performance modern full auto shooters demand. With the 70 round drum you'll have unparalleled capacity and control with this 9mm machine gun. It's so smooth due to the weight, layout, and action: you can actually watch your target being hit through a 4X scope while shooting long bursts. The quick change barrel system enables the U9 to switch between heavy and light setups with ease.

- Caliber: 9mm
- Cycle Rate: 750
- Includes two 70 rd drums, one 36 rd mag, combo tool, bipod, foregrip, custom hard case, & suppressor

PLACING AN AD

Advertisers will furnish FIREARMS NEWS with copy legibly printed or typewritten on one side of the paper only. Please leave a margin of at least 1" on all sides. Classified ad copy can be submitted on disk, e-mailed to SGNews@outdoorsg.com, through www.firearmsnews.com, or picked up from your web site.

Contact the Art Director before submitting electronic display advertising.

Due care and diligence is used in checking advertising copy for accuracy, but the Publisher makes no warranty, express or implied. Advertisers and FIREARMS NEWS are not responsible for typographical errors, mistakes or misprints.

All ads received too late for the current issue will be inserted in the following issue, unless you qualify the submission of the ad. Existing ad copy may be substituted if new copy fails to arrive by the specified date.

Advertising is credit card, check or money order in advance. If uncertain as to the cost of your ad, submit it and we will advise the amount to be remitted, and we will refund any overage.

Artwork is kept in our files for 13 months and then destroyed. Reproduction quality is not guaranteed.

THE EDITOR'S VIEW

THERE'S NO FAITH

The saying, as I loosely recall it, "there's no faith like that of the new believer" applies to more than just religion. Think about it. Folks who have been involved in something their whole life might take whatever it is for granted, or worse, become bored or disinterested in it. Oftentimes the most fanatical followers of anything are those who found it later in life. Such is the case with me and guns; I was "born again" at the gun show circuit some years ago.

The closest thing I had to a firearm when I was a kid was a Crossman Pumpmaster 760 BB gun that was kept at my grandmother's house. Every time my family would go to visit, I'd go find it as quickly as possible. At the first opportunity I'd gather up empty soda cans, hang them from tree branches in the backyard and commence to perforating them as thoroughly as possible. During one summer visit the gun was gone. I was beyond bummed. But like a chigger, the gun bug was under my skin.

After that, the next gun I encountered was the first one I purchased, a Smith & Wesson SW40VE that I bought at a gun show in Orlando when I was attending the University of Central Florida. It took the proverbial John Deere to pull that trigger and the recoil hit hard for a beginner, but that didn't matter; I was shooting a real gun.

From there, I spent most of my expendable income on ammunition and accessories until I realized there was a world of guns out there, each with a different purpose. I bought a Ruger 22/45, an SKS (from the then Shotgun News) and of all things a Taurus Tracker in .44 Magnum, a gun I've since sold and regretted doing so dearly. I quickly became known as a "gun guy" among my friends, which was a title I enjoyed. Not long after, I got into reloading and joined a gun club as I bought more and more guns, each with an intended purpose. I shot trap and metallic silhouette religiously. Some guns I bought and purposely sold to help pay bills, or more likely, buy a different gun. Eventually I got a Weatherby Vanguard in .300 Win Mag for deer hunting. Right about then I had begun building AR-15s for myself and others (not as a dealer/manufacture, simply assembling) and had several accurate .223s, so I reasoned that I ought to go to the other end of the power spectrum and went whole-hog with the .300. For the record, I haven't regretted it since. I've dropped plenty of deer with that Weatherby.

I relate all of this to illustrate that my passion for all kinds of firearms hasn't waned yet. I got in the game late, so to speak, so I feel like I have to make up for lost time. The books I read anymore are about guns, the websites I visit are all about guns, and much of my free time is taken up with gun-related hobbies, most often hunting.

If you've become jaded or bored with shooting, perhaps it's time you find a new discipline. If you've been a trap shooter for a while but find excuses for not making it to matches, perhaps you ought to give silhouette a try. If you've never done one of the run-and-gun disciplines, they're gaining in popularity every day and are a hoot. Plus, finding a new passion might give you a reason to buy a quality AR, shotgun or pistol, or perhaps all three if you opt into 3-gun competitions.

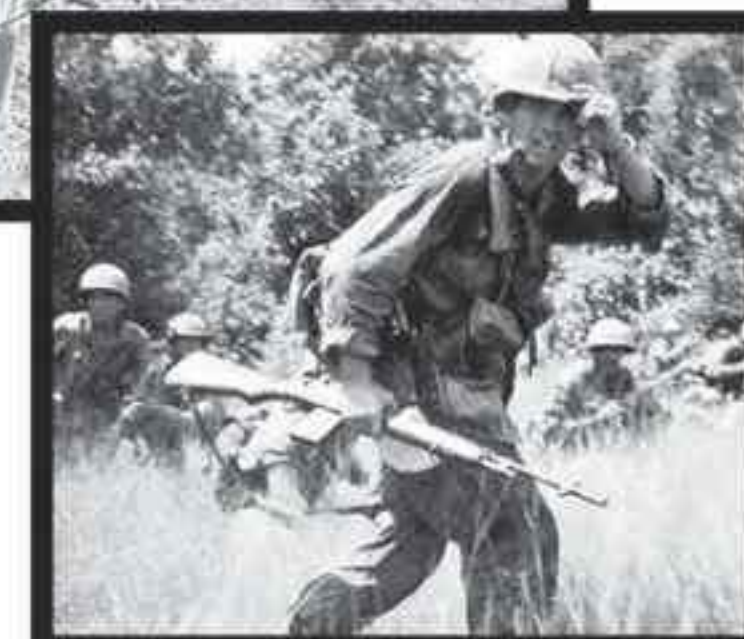

Whatever your abilities or limitations are, there's a shooting sport for you. All it takes is a little initiative and you can easily be "born again" in gunpowder and lead, much like I was. FN

Best,

Adam Saez

ROCKOLA M14Special.....* $2,195Regular price....*$2,395

The Rockola M14F is built to the exact standards of the USGI original. The receiver is machined from an 8620 forging. This rifle is completed by using USGI original parts, a new U.S. made barrel and an excellent refinished wood stock. Our rifle is as close to the original USGI version available on the market today. A carbine configuration is also available with an 19.25" barrel.

EXPERIENCE HISTORY

M1 GARANDSpecial.....* $1,395Regular price....*$1,495

The M1, commonly called a Garand after it's designer John Garand, has been carefully restored to "arsenal re-issue". As the first semi-auto weapon issued to regular troops in the field it gave the U.S. a distinct advantage. The original GI receiver and all metal parts have been bead blasted and reparkerized in the original finish. The barrel is a new production Criterion. The M1 is a semiautomatic gas-operated rifle which is fed by an eight round "enbloc" clip.

1903A4 SNIPERSpecial.....* $1,295Regular price....*$1,495

Our 1903A4 sniper rifle is meticulously rebuilt using original 1903A3 receivers. The rifle, used well into the Vietnam war, is a late production model with 7/8 rings and new high quality 2.5 power Hi-Lux M82 scope. It's available with a Criterion 4 groove barrel. Production is limited.

ARTICULATED MACHINE GUN CRADLE / MOUNT

Love this mount! It has a base to bolt onto a vehicle, bunker or ship, wall or bulkhead. Torsion springs in the base provide strong adjustments for elevation or depression allowing for the cradle to lock at an angle or parallel to the ground. Cradle accepts .30 cal / .308 size machine guns and comes with attaching pins along with a plate mounted to the right side that was used for mounting a searchlight if needed. It is relatively light compared to similar equilibrator cradle mounts, but is made from steel and quite rugged. Left side has bracket for holding an ammo can tray. Would work well with Jeeps, armored vehicles and boats! From the base mount, it raises to about 12 inches high and with cradle attached, takes it up to about 16" in height. Original military item:

ABOUT HIGH CAPACITY MAGAZINES:

Although we try to stay abreast of current State gun laws, it is a herculean task with over 20,000 laws on the books. By ordering, you are stating that you are complying with your Local & State laws. Most States allow large capacity magazines. Some do not. If you are unsure on this issue, contact your Local or State law enforcement to confirm what is allowed. This is a partial list of States with some hi-capacity restrictions: NJ, NY, MA, MD, HI, KS, CO, CT, IL and various county laws therein including Chicago, D.C.

GHURKA KUKRIS KNIVES

Once Again Available - We've been Dry for 6 Months

The fierce ghurkas are the elite fighting troops of the Indian Army. Their very presence on the field of battle will often cause an enemy to fear for his life, due to the blood thirsty reputation of these fierce fighters. Every ghurka carries a Kukris knife, which he can use to deadly effect in hand-to-hand combat. We now have a nice selection of Kukris knives. Each knife comes in a black leather scabbard with two small "skinning" knives mounted on the scabbard

ITALIAN BM59 RIFLE PARTS SETS

These are all of the parts except the receiver for the early model 7.62mm Italian BM59SL rifle. This rifle is essentially a standard M1 Garand semi-automatic that has been modified to use 20 rd. BM59 magazines, and has been chambered for 7.62mm Nato ammunition. It retains the well proven Garand sights, trigger mechanism and gas system, while doing away with the 8 round Garand clip in favor of a 20 round detachable box magazine. These parts sets can be assembled on an M1 Garand receiver which will require a few modifications to accept the new feed system. Parts are in very good condition, bores are nice. $595.00 ea. Original New Israeli FAL heavy Barrel stock & forend set $39.50 FAL147

Long ago we acquired a small lot of early FN manufactured kits from 'conflict zones' in the Western Hemisphere, (Americas). Although many of the rifles had sustained battle damage, we have culled these out and can offer you the parts sets of these veteran rifles. These original metric FALs exhibit features of the early 'G' series FAL that have been so elusive. The Stock & handguards were in rough condition so we have replaced them with a new original steel military handguard set (value $90.00 - Handguard will be different than pictured) and an original new military period wood buttstock compatible with the early buttplate & swivel, (original buttplate and swivel are included). The barrel has been demilled, but the attaching parts are present including the swivel, regulator, front sight, gas block and late style flash hider. Bolt carrier, bolt assy, cover, charging handle, piston & spring, and other associated parts are present. No upper receiver. Great set of parts for building that Early FAL rifle that you've always wanted.

We offer these kits in 2 configurations:

- A. Complete kit with new wood buttstock and an original FAL metal handguard... $275.00 FAL297
B. Complete kit without stock and handguard, but with pistol grip... $195.00 FAL298

Don't miss out on these early FAL kits! - Only have a small lot.

1903A3 SPRINGFIELD RIFLES FROM 'THE PACIFIC'

A small number of good condition, firing rifles from the HBO series, The Pacific, are still available. These were wartime rifles that served again in the filming of the mini series. Most are Smith Corona or Remington. Stored since the filming, and each rifle is sold with certificates of Authenticity, certificates of formal handling from Customs documents, Armament prop handlers, and the production firm. Chain of custody is fully authenticated and Sarco was the supplier and final recipient after production. A rare chance to obtain a piece of movie memorabilia and an actual firing 1903A3 Springfield. (FFL required).

Brand new LDA complete Frame assembly in original Para Ordnance box! You can purchase this alone or reap tremendous savings on purchasing this with a SLIDE of your choice. The Para steel Frame accepts 3.5 inch and 4.25" slides and can be used with 3" slides if the hood is trimmed back - Will not work with a 5" slide. The frame is the Officer's Model LDA, single stack, and is not caliber specific so you can customize it to 38 Super, 9mm, 40 S&W, .45 ACP. The frame is cut for the Clark® type ramped barrels. The barrels and recoil spring assemblies are available from numerous commercial sources and the frame accepts the shorter 1911 Officers magazine. Enormous savings will be realized when you examine these prices against the price of a new LDA pistol at $700-800!

1. Frame assembly in box..... $235.00 GUN588
2. Slide of your choice - 40% off retail price online! Go to our website and choose from a host of 3", 3.5" & 4.25" Para LDA slides. Valid on up to 10 Para LDA slides when purchased with Frame assembly in box. Go to www.e-sarcoinc.com to make your selection.

Note: Para Ordnance Light Double Action Pistols are premium compact firearms popular for 'concealed carry' and well respected for quality and performance. Para Ordnance has been absorbed into Remington, and Sarco will also have a position in selling many of the original quality parts. In fact, our substantial inventory of Para Ordnance parts, will allow us to supply parts for many, many years to come!

ROCK ISLAND 1911 MICROMAG 22 TCM / 9MM

Randy from GunsForSale.com writes that this is a brand new 1911-style autoloader chambered in the new .22 TCM caliber. Rock Island Armory cartridge designer Fred Craig said the proprietary .223-based pistol caliber round sends a 40 grain jacketed hollow point bullet downrange at 2100 feet per second. The goal was to make a 1911-type pistol "with the same weight, but double the firepower and delivering more foot pounds of energy."

ENFIELD COLLECTOR FIND!!!! ENFIELD #1 MK3 WIRE BOUND GRENADE LAUNCHING RIFLE

Sarco has a few original Lee Enfield #1 MK3 Rifles that were purposefully wire bound for use with firing rifle grenades, because the pressures and duress on the rifle exceeded the pounding it took from firing the .303 cartridge by up to 3 times the pressure, the Ordnance Corps issued directives for wire wrapping the rifle mid-section for the purpose of retaining the hand guards and preventing them from splintering. The pressure, which also equated to dropping the rifle from about 12-14 feet on its butt end, gives one consideration for the stresses the rifle had to contend with. Now's great chance to obtain one of these rare rifles. Rifle only, in good condition.

COMPLETE MAUSER, FULLY MACHINED & FORGED, LARGE RING EUROPEAN COMMERCIAL ACTIONS MANUFACTURED BY THE FAMED FIREARMS MAKER DUMOULIN OF 'BELGIUM'

Building your own Sniper, Target, or Varmint rifle has never been so enticing! Sarco worked for over a year to bring you this colossal opportunity to own a brand new, complete Dumoulin Mauser action at the best price on the world market!!!! Let's get to the objective specs, on what this means for you:

RECEIVER: This is an A-2 steel, forged / heat treated body which has been checked and gauged after each machining operation ensuring precision with strict tolerances and ultimately, superb mating with attached parts and adherence to Engineer drawings.
BOLT: A-2 Steel, one piece bolt, handle & knob with checkered flat on underside. The extractor is the traditional proven, 'claw type' extractor. Bolt Head diameter is set for the .30-06 family of cartridges.
(A2 Chromium/molybdenum/vanadium is tool steel).
RECEIVER SPECIAL FEATURES: Flats with threaded holes and dovetails, permit the use of a variety of rings and bases. This feature eliminates the need for screwed on bases. Each flat is predrilled and threaded for standard 6-48 screws in 2 places. Flat tops are parallel and at the same level. These Actions have been engineered from original FN Belgian blue prints.
TRIGGER MECHANISM: The trigger is fully adjustable for sear engagement, over travel, and creep. The trigger body is made of steel.
TRIGGER GUARD: This trigger guard is fully machined from a steel forging and has a hinged FN/ Ruger style floorplate and latch. Believe it or not, I priced a similar trigger guard at the Shotshow from a German supplier and they wanted $800 for the guard. The Action capacity is 5 rds. of .30-06 length ammo.
FINISH: These Actions and Guards are blued. Some have bright bolts.
RECEIVER THREADS: Threads are standard 1.10 x 12 TPI.

BOLT-SPECIAL FEATURES: Strength of the forged bolt exceeds that of bolts in normal production. The specially designed bolt sleeve is an FN type and incorporates a Winchester style side swing 3 position blocking safety. This type of safety allows the use of a single or double set trigger in complete safety and preventing a discharge. Currently a similar bolt sleeve sells for $150.00-$250.00 separately.
WHY PURCHASE THIS ACTION? To our knowledge, no one in the world presently makes a fully machined '98 Mauser action. Cost would be prohibitive! Just the value of the bolt assembly & trigger guard equate to more than our cost of the action. This may be your last chance to buy a fully milled '98 Mauser Action! *We know of no fully milled actions being produced in the world. These were produced many years ago and we bought the entire lot for posterity. These are the same actions Dumoulin uses to build their $10,000. rifles!
WHAT DO THE PROS SAY? - We gave some of these actions to one of the best barrel manufacturers in the U.S., a Custom Rifle Mfr., and an exceptionally talented gunsmith who prepares gunsmithing school courses, to see what they thought. They praised these actions and commented that, according to normal gunsmithing practices, the following should be observed where building a rifle:
1. Lap the bolt lugs & receiver locking recesses for full contact and improved accuracy.

2. Face off and true the front of the receiver.
3. Shape the feed ramp.
4. Checking the bolt face to make sure it is square & true.
5. Like any other high end firearm, these actions require your final hand fitting and tuning. These are not operations that a machine can do and are best left to the assembler.
NOTE: The hardness of the receiver & bolt were checked and are at RC47/48. (Optimal!)
HERE'S THE DEAL: We would NOT be embarrassed to offer these actions at $595., but we will pass our lucky buy onto you at the fabulous price of only $349.95 GUN567 as an introductory price. Price may go up later if we find we are too generous!
DUMOULIN BARRELS TOO!
We lucked out and purchased some barrels that were specifically made for these Dumoulin Mauser actions. They are threaded to the standard Mauser dimensions of 1.10 x 12 threads per inch. We can offer the following caliber barrels:
.270 Winchester..... $74.95 MSR602
.30-06..... $74.95 MSR601
Note: these barrels were purposely made with a .010" oversize thread OD for the tighter fit & more accuracy. They screw on just fine with proper barrel installation equipment. The shank length is .003" longer than receiver depth from front of receiver collar which is the proper thread crush for barrel seating. We also stock Dumoulin parts-See our 10th ad or visit our website!

BALLESTER MOLINA

As an improvement to the 1911 A1 pattern Argentina produced the Ballester Molina. Changes were made in the hammer strut, firing pin stop, safety lock, mainspring housing & trigger. Designed and built by the Argentine Co. Hispano Argentina Fabricade Automobiles (HAFDASA). These were marketed as an affordable alternative to the Colt 1927 Systema. These haven't been available for many, many years.

- An interesting variation for your .45 1911 collection or as an affordable shooter
- Grips replaced with new or excellent proper Ballester Molina grips
- Magazines are replaced with new magazines for functionality
- For safety sake, we have replaced all recoil springs and firing pin springs

GUN512 Medium grade with markings worn $349.00
We have about 5 Ballester Rigauds in the pile.

NOTE: All of these Argentine guns are C&R eligible. However if shipped to a C&R they must be sent via UPSD overnight.

Some of Juan Perone's personal guard guns still available.

1903A4 U.S. SPRINGFIELD SNIPER RIFLES

with proper M73B1 Scope!

Small lot available. These rifles have original 1903A3 G.I. receivers and most parts are original G.I. They have a new criterion 4 groove barrel identical to the original. The scope is an exact repro of the M73 B1 scope by HiLux with some current technology internal improvements. External is exact repro. These guns are produced by the acclaimed Rock Ridge machine & are fully approved for CMP vintage sniper rifle matches. Scope mount is an exact repro—stock is beautiful "C" type full pistol grip stock. Rifle is fully parkerized $1395.00 GUN564

used them as trainers in the late 60's and early

70's. The condition of these rifles is good with some stock dents and dings from training, shipping and storage. Bores are excellent and have many years of life left in them. All Guns come with (1) 15 Round Magazine.

We are also offering some rifles missing both front and rear sights at a lower price for those who wish to mount a scope on their EM1. Don't procrastinate!! These rifles won't last long. This is a rare find!

37MM RUSSIAN 'SPADE' MORTAR (non-firing display)

When is a spade not just a spade? When it's a Mortar too! Sarco has the 'Kamabee Keep' rework of the coolest mortar design in the history of warfare. Innovative Russian designers took the concept of the standard 'Entrenching Tool' that every soldier wore on his belt, and elevated it to 'Heavy Weapon Status', by allowing it to dig trenches & also fire 37mm Mortar Rounds! Designed in the late 1930s and fielded against Finland in late 1939/40 in the Russo Finn War, and throughout WW2 along the Russian Front.

Never been on the U.S. or World market! It can be attached to your belt using the canvas & leather carrier, be detached to operate as a small shovel, or used to lob rounds on the enemy. Transforms into a mortar in @15 seconds with practice. This is a new made replication of the original and is non-firing. Sarco Inc. carries this item exclusively and they are currently in stock. We also have the 'late war' style 15 round bandolier used by troops to carry mortar ammunition including Mosin Nagant Rifle ammunition. To top it off, we have replica 37mm Mortar inert display rounds available too!

The only place to see this item in the entire world is in a Russian military museum. Truly this is a piece of ordnance lost to history! The design concept was amazing and its impact could still be amazing in this day & age! Imagine a platoon of infantry Riflemen also each carrying 15 mortar shells and working as a fire and maneuver machine. Stalinist purges and a failure to develop better ammunition put this idea to sleep before its time!

WW2 U.S. M19 60mm PARATROOP MORTAR (non-firing display)

U.S. Marine Raider and Army Airborne units benefited from a light 60mm mortar assembly rushed to the front in 1942. Roughly a 20 lb. mortar, this allowed a savings of 25+ lbs. over the standard M2 mortar, and allowed for more ammo to be carried. Paratroops learned how to utilize it by aiming with the M15 sight as used on the M1 Garand grenade launcher and by using a degree of 'Kentucky Windage' to walk rounds on top of the enemy at places like Bougainville, Solomon Islands, Guadalcanal, Operation Husky, etc. Also significant use occurred in Korea and Vietnam. Our non-firing steel replica uses the original WW2 issue baseplate and M15 sight assembly with a new made undersized I.D. tube and non-functional ball and cap assy. with lanyard latch firing lever. First time available in the United States! Mortar only. Supplies are very limited

Bren Model L4A3 .308 LMG

After over 50 years of searching for these on the international market, we've finally obtained the classic .308 Bren as used from the 1950s through the 1990s! Last major use was in the Falklands War, but they are still blasting away in the Congo, Sudan, and other hot spots. Predecessor to the MAG-58, the Bren .308 LMGs evolved in many versions, whether converted from existing Bren models or made completely new, these guns were a formidable improvement on the .303 models. Stalwart enough for use in the Falkland operation where British 2 Para, employed them along side the MAG-58. The magazines were ideally made to interchange with the the L1A1 service rifle of the time. Sarco has obtained the Model L4A3 Bren Light Machine Gun and had the receivers cut to BATF specifications. All parts are included with the kit including the 4 pieces of Demil. Rec., new made short chambered barrel with all original fittings (some assembly required) , and we include 1 - 30 rd .308 magazine! The quality of the kit is generally in very good condition with a new barrel. This would make a fabulous 'semi' build , or display gun. Get one while you can because they are quite limited!

BREN MK1 LMG PARTS SET

Evolution of the Bren stemmed from initial designs at the Brno factory in Czechoslovakia. After licensing, patent changes, and political inclinations, the British Commission brought the design to Enfield where production commenced in 1937. From then on , it is a story of Hell, Death, and Destruction.... As one of the finest machine guns put to use on modern battlefields, Bren Mk1 LMGs were the most expensive to make and perhaps the best looking with all of it's intricacies . Timing of production was excellent as in less than 2 years, the 'Tommy' and Commonwealth soldiers would be carrying it into battle at Dunkirk, El Alamein, Borneo, D-Day and untold of altercations and sorties as the Axis powers were rolled up. Ultimately, it served with well over 30 countries and can still be found in remote regions. Our Bren Mk1 kit comes with all parts shown including a very good MK1 barrel, five - .303 magazines, and the original receiver cut in 4 pcs per the BATF requirement.

$649.95 BREN019

BREN MK 3 LMG PARTS SET

Regarded as the lightest of the Bren Guns, the MK3 had lightening cuts made to the receiver and usually was found with a barrel @2-3/4 inches shorter than the MK2 series barrel. Nevertheless, both sized barrels were used on this gun in WW2 . This model was envisaged as an answer for Airborne and Infantry troops fighting in the jungles of the Pacific, but actually once production started in 1943, it found its way to every theater of the war. Our kit comes with all parts shown including the correct receiver cut to BATF specifications, a very good condition MK2 barrel and 5 - .303 cal. magazines.....

RPG-2 Rocket Launchers.... Crossed the Frontier & Have Arrived!!!!

Original and In Virtually 'Like New' Condition !!!!

Light and streamlined, the Russian designed RPG-2 Rocket Launcher was effective against Infantry and Armor. Vietnam was a key testing ground for the real world employment of this weapon. U.S. forces gained an acute respect for the impact of this weapon which caused great anxiety for troops moving in M113 APCs and M48 tanks as well as Cargo trucks running back and forth from the DMZ. With it's low profile and ease of loading, the RPG-2 maintained a sinister presence in the jungles of Vietnam and over the decades, it was effective throughout conflicts in Asia, Africa, and South & Central America.

Sarco has obtained these RPG-2s from the Warsaw Bloc and they have been deactivated to BATF specifications. The launchers are in excellent condition and have a bore hole cut in the tube as part of the deactivation. Also a solid rod is in place within the bore as required. The trigger housing is functional, can cock and click with a trigger pull, and the front and rear sights are functional and have good spring tension. Also.....an RPG-2 Rocket without booster will fit into the tube just fine and it makes a fabulous display piece and is extremely realistic! Our stock is quite limited and we are not sure if we will be able to obtain more.

RUSSIAN PPSH-41 SMG (non-firing)

Truly one of the world's first class sub machine guns of WW2 & beyond. Over 5 million produced and many of them came face to face with U.S. servicemen in Korea and Vietnam. Spewing a voracious 900+ rds. a minute with 7.62x25 Tokarev ammo, this gun demanded respect, especially when the Soviets outfitted entire Companies of their infantry with this SMG against German troops in WW2 and the Chinese against U.N. troops in Korea. This glorious full size, non-firing display gun in wood and metal with removable 71rd. drum, has an action that allows you to cock the bolt and pull the trigger. We also offer an Original Ppsh41 sling and Pouch with this package ,as long as supplies last. (colors of pouch & sling may vary).

Mle-49 'Le Chapeau de Brousse'
Famous and very hard to find, French 'bush hat' as used by the French Foreign Legion during their conflicts in Vietnam and Algerian theaters of operation. We have a small number of new manufactured Mle-49 hats in the almost impossible to find size of U.S. size 7-1/2" (Large)!!! These are faithfully made in a heavy khaki cotton with traditional batting in the brim (not cardboard !). 2 grommets on each side with brim snap on one side. Because of the difficulty and labor intensive sewing pattern that encompassed the entire hat to make it durable to the standards of the Legion, we had to work with a number of manufacturers before we found one who could get it right! You'll love this hat on the farm, camping, travelling etc! We like it because it is truly a bush hat that looks 'hard core adventurer', and not commercial traveler. The type you'd wear all year round in Panama or Alaska!

March 14 & 15, 2016 | Fairfield, Maine

The tradition continues at James D. Julia with numerous record prices realized in our 2015 auctions for fine, historic and iconic firearms. Our successful October 2015 firearms auction once again solidified our position as the leading international auction house for fine firearms with over $15 Million in sales. In recent years, the roll call of Private, Estate and Institutional collections being offered reads like a Who's Who from the firearms universe. These sales are anticipated and followed by an international audience of collectors, dealers, and enthusiasts. Many major niches in today's collecting world is represented in both quality and quantity. The March 2016 sale will again feature important consignments from prestigious Private Collections and Estates: The Finest Confederate Revolver Collection Ever Assembled -The Collection of Don and Kathlee Bryan; The Esteemed Paul Tudor Jones II Collection; Steve Ardia Collection of Outstanding Colts (Session 1) from FL; Fine Sporting Arms from the Collection of John Koilakos (Athens, Greece); The Lifelong Collection of Herbert Hyatt from CA; A County Gentleman's Spectacular Collection of American Sporting Guns from VA; The Arthur Spriropoulos Estate Collection of Fine Antique Firearms from Nova Scotia; The Rod Fuller Estate Browning Firearm Collection (Second Session); The Lifelong Collection of W.G. Fred's Military M14 Rifle Stocks

FREE! w/every order CMP info 25meter sight-in target genuine shooting/GI surplus item & valuable pro-gun info!

Yep, the rumors are true; I am transitioning into—if not retirement, at least, semiretirement.

Still 30,000+ M14 stocks to sell, many in the better grades. These stocks are all original GI, with all the metal—buttplate, liner (except Syn), sling swivels, and ferule (except Syn). They came straight from Uncle Sam, so you will be getting an original M14 stock, regardless of the grade you order. While the 30,000 remaining are a mere shadow of what I originally had—150,000 or more—there's still plenty of good stocks for you:

"Presentation" grade: Walnut or Birch (birch is about 20% stronger than walnut, and more resistant to cracking) M14 stocks which seem to be unissued, and with almost no "bumps" picked up in storage.

"As New" grade: Walnut, Birch, or Synthetic M14 stocks which appear unissued, but have picked up a few "bumps" in storage. Being 50 years old, these have gotta be scarce. In fact, here at Fred's, they are already scarce! "Used", ranging from "As New?" thru grades of "Excellent" all the way down to "Grade II". You will find the complete list and pricing at fredsm14stocks.com

Original US GI M14 Synthetic Stocks, most in unissued condition which straddles "Excellent" and "As New" condition. The toughest, strongest GI M14 rifle stock. Waterproof. Not my first choice (I like wood), but as I shot my rifle with one more and more, I came to appreciate that toughness and it became a standard on my rifle.

Look at the heavier-cut Birch "Big Red" M14 rifle stocks. Extra wood? Wood which is 20% stronger than walnut? Must be one tough stock! (Haven't tested it, but it may be as strong as Synthetic...)

And while on our site, check out the only place where can you go to get an authentic and original US GI "Vietnam" M14 Rifle stock, complete with matching handguard and sling, currently for $25. (Plus UPS, of course) By the way, as supplies of these dwindle, the price is sure to go up! Or a rare autographed copy of one of the best (and earliest) survivalist tales, "Patriots"...

Check out what has become a lovable and treasured (among Riflemen) complete instructions titled "Fred's Guide on How to Become a Rifleman", along with the targets to get you there, along with why it is important for you to become a rifleman, and then get your friends, neighbors, and co-workers to qualify. Be a Rifleman in America? How nice would that be? In the future, you will be able to find one of the scarce highly desirable M14E2 stocks, complete with all GI metal—the hard-to-find GI front fold-down handgrip, the HTF rear buttplate—all direct from Uncle Sam. Maybe you are an advanced collector, and would be interested in an extremely rare prototype M14E2 stock? (Not cheap, but how many have you seen—or are likely to see?)

Or maybe you'd like the challenging "Redcoat" target, where with 13 rounds you can answer a question you never thought to ask—but instantly realize how valuable the answer is—"How far away am I effective with my rifle?"

Or a genuine (appearing) M14 sniper stock from Vietnam service? (Currently, not for sale—but if you have $600...)

Fred's

"Bottom line, I could live in the problem or live in the solution... I chose the solution, Applesseed." Wade

"TURN OVER THE KEYS..."

Yeah, I could say it: "Turn over the keys to the country; it's all over..." [shakes head...]

But it would be a waste of breath, because if you are who I think you are (but I hope you are not), you have already turned them over.

No need for me to stick my nose in, at all.

Yep, for all your manliness, your professed toughness, your unyielding opposition to tyranny, you've already surrendered. Without a fight. [Guess I've always had a thing about pompous phonies...]

Yep, you just can't help it. You're too smart. I hear it often: "Fred, it's too late..."

Shame he didn't invest in stocks, since he knows the future. Could make a lot of money.

But in truth he doesn't know the future. And the "too late" comment is just an excuse to avoid getting off the couch.

To hide his lack of backbone, his lack of any fundamental moral fiber, to hide his ignorance of even "knowing what to do".

Shameful. In a century and in a country where "shame" no longer exists.

What a waste...

The founders fought a bloody 8-yr-long war to gain independence; they then hammered out a Constitution and got it adopted. That Constitution guaranteed you'd have power. The power to change things. The power to make things happen.

For generations, it worked well. We had freedom. We had prosperity. We had progress. We had growth.

Now that's all past. Because it could not guarantee you'd have a backbone. Nor could it protect you against phony high self-esteem. So modern Americans are too smart. Too smart to appreciate what they've been given by those long-ago founders, the ones who fought, froze, starved, died of lead and fever—and are totally forgotten, today. Worse, the cathedral they built—that mighty edifice of freedom and liberty—is forgotten as well. Now crumbling, and fading into nothingness.

And so we will be reliving history, as those in charge tell us how to think, what to think...[but we (you and I) can change that, if we want to...]

"Duck and Cover"

While our good buddies in the PC crowd love to jeer at those government films in the 1950s advising, in the face of atomic attack, to "take immediate shelter"—and if you're a kid in school, to get under your desk—all usually summed up by the PC crowd as useless "duck and cover" advice, they don't really have anything better to offer to us modern Americans.

The current official advice to deal with terrorism (a fanatic showing up with an AK in your face) is to "stay alert", sometimes amplified by "go in your house, and lock your door"—as if a door can't be kicked in, as if a terrorist is even likely to attack your neighborhood—surely pretty profitless—most neighborhoods you never see anyone out on the street. No, it will be at a mall, school, movie theater—some place with a lot of people, with little prospect of quivering behind useless locked doors.

So, "duck and cover" is revised, not reviled, by the modern "I'm in control" PC leadership... apparently, for all their brilliance and superiority, they can't come up with anything more effective than ducking and hiding...

Oh yeah, "if you see something, say something", so when the AK bullets start splitting the air around you, be sure to make that call to 911 and see how long you survive...[rolls eyes]

"Concealed carry" adds a new element to the mix, one the currently dominant PC control folks don't want to acknowledge. And frown on, of course.

But even then, taking on an AK with a handgun may demand more skill than most CCers have—for one thing, you'd want to be able to hit a rapidly-moving target at more than the usual "end of the hallway" distance. For another, when the police show up, better hope you're done shooting; otherwise, you'll likely be classed as a terrorist target, yourself - and become just another "friendly fire" statistic.

It's a tough world. Good thing you're still on the couch, letting those-who-know run things...(but it's not too late to get off that couch...why not do it? Join us in Applesseed.)

THE KNOX UPDATE

From The Firearms Coalition

By Jeff Knox

DANGEROUS DISORDER IN THE COURT

(October 20, 2015) The Federal Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has once again come down with a shameful ruling based on selective interpretation of the Supreme Court's narrow rulings in Heller and McDonald. In this latest abomination from the courts, the three-judge panel concluded that New York and Connecticut's laws banning virtually all semi-auto rifles as "assault weapons" and banning all "high-capacity" magazines, do indeed "burden" and infringe on citizens' rights under the Second Amendment, but they go on to conclude that the states' "compelling governmental interest in public safety and crime prevention" carry greater weight than individuals' rights to self-defense—in spite of the fact that "assault weapons" are rarely used in crime, and laws restricting them and "high-capacity" magazines have proven useless in practical application. Conspicuously missing from the court's reasoning was any reference to the militia or to the previous, primary Supreme Court ruling on the Second Amendment, US v. Miller.

In Miller, the Court commented that this militia relationship had to be considered in any judgement regarding the right to arms. They went on to conclude that, since they weren't aware of a short-barreled shotgun being a normal part of militia equipment, that such an arm was not protected under the Second Amendment.

For almost 60 years after the 1939 Miller decision, lower courts misused the "militia" comment to mean that the right to arms only applied to people actively enrolled in a government-sanctioned militia. Had that been the Justices intent, Miller's claim would have been rejected because he was not a militia member. Instead, his claim was rejected because his gun, a sawed-off shotgun, was not recognized by them as a common military weapon.

By focusing on self-defense, the Heller decision didn't negate the Miller decision. On the contrary, it expanded it. Miller addressed the Second Amendment from the perspective of the people's ability to effectively participate in the militia if called upon to do so, and specifically addressed the types of arms protected for that purpose. Heller recognized that the right extends beyond militia purposes to include the right to arms for self-defense. For any court to rely solely on one of these decisions without any consideration for the other is an outrage, but courts are now ruling as if Miller had been completely repudiated. It was not.

It should be understood that only the Supreme Court has the authority to interpret the Constitution. Lower courts are required to rule based on established precedents and principles set by Supreme Court decisions. Further, the Supreme Court itself is heavily bound by its own precedent under a doctrine known as stare decisis, a Latin term meaning "the decision stands." Rulings made by the Court in the 1700s and 1800s are still in effect and binding upon the Supreme Court and all lower courts, unless the Supreme Court specifically revisits the issue and reverses or modifies that previous decision. That is something that almost never happens. Instead, the Supreme Court goes through elaborate legal gymnastics to work around conflicting precedents, and the lower courts do the same thing. Only the Supreme Court can ultimately decide whether the lower court contortions are acceptable, but there is nothing to compel them to accept a case for review. Over the past few years there have been numerous cases regarding Second Amendment issues that have been appealed to the Supreme Court with conflicting rulings from lower courts, but the Supremes have doggedly refused to take up those cases.

The decision to review a case requires only the agreement of 4 of the 9 Justices. The Court's refusal to hear Second Amendment cases probably rises from the fact that the Court is evenly divided on Second Amendment issues. The wild card is Justice Kennedy. He voted in favor of both Heller and McDonald, but it was clear that he had reservations. It is very likely that Kennedy is refusing to make clear his position on recent cases, leaving both sides wondering where he would come down, and leaving neither side with enough confidence to push forward with a hearing on these cases.

As I have pointed out several times before, several members of the Court are likely to retire sometime soon. Justice Ginsburg is the oldest at 82 and in frail health. Next oldest are Kennedy and Scalia, who will both turn 80 in 2016. Of the three eldest members, Scalia's view is reliably conservative, Ginsburg is reliably liberal, and Kennedy is the perpetual swing Justice, whose votes decided both Heller and McDonald. Odds are increasingly good that time will catch up with at least one of these three, and possibly one or two more within the next four years. The balance of the Supreme Court is at stake in the coming Presidential election, and in the Senate elections where the next Justices will be confirmed. It's up to GunVoters to see that decisions like this latest Second Circuit outrage do not stand, and that Heller and McDonald are not washed away in a political tide.

SHEPHERD SCOPES—THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY
RANGE-FINDING, BULLET DROP COMPENSATING SCOPE WITH PATENTED DUAL RETICLES!

Zero in with one shot at 100 yards & you now have the range & bullet drop capabilities out to 1000 yards on any power with no further adjustment.
"Quality, precision & ease of use you could only dream about"

SEE US AT SHOT SHOW BOOTH #2646

Visit us for a chance to enter our drawing and win a CQB® Scope!

THE ONLY SCOPE IN THE WORLD TO GUARANTEE ITS ADJUSTMENTS AND TRACKING TO BE 100% ACCURATE - 100% OF THE TIME!!!

The unique Dual Reticle System, having the cross hair in the rear focal plane and the range finding circles in the front focal plane allows you one-shot zeroing. It's what sets the Shepherd apart from Zeiss, Nikon, Swarovski and other high quality scopes. It permits one-shot Zeroing, dead-on holding to extreme range with any high velocity load, windage and elevation adjustments that you know are accurate because you can visually verify them as they take place. An aiming point that stays on dead zero throughout the complete magnification range, parallax-elimination, and a quick and easy way to adapt for wind without losing the basic zero. Sounds like a lot of goodies wrapped up in one scope. All built into the Shepherd and one way or another they all derive from the patented Dual Reticle System.

3-10X40 $799.00 6-18X40 $899.00 (prices subject to change without notice)

Don't look for discounts, this is already the best bargain on the market. Your savings will come in ammo & a full freezer. We can match your rifle & load. We have 24" circles for our big game hunters. 18" circles for our all around hunters & 9" circles for our varminters. Join our Shepherd friends, grab your Shepherd scopes mounted on your rifles & be AMAZED at your shooting skills.

Barrett 50

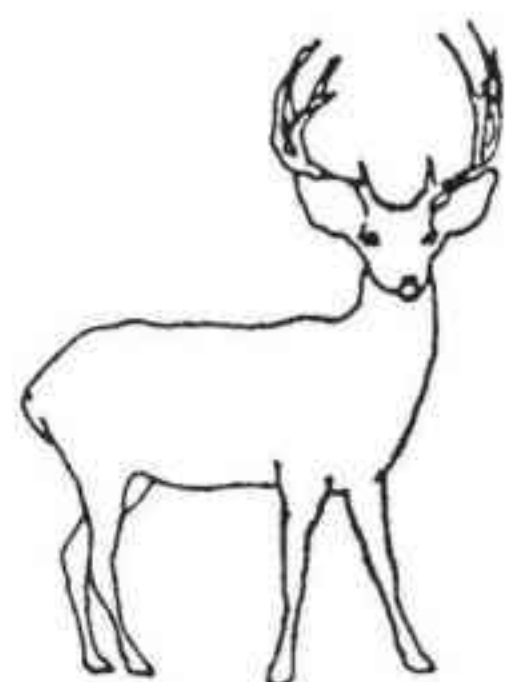

"With about two minutes of instructions my trainees were making consistent hits from 100 to 800 yards with the Shepherd P2 scope. Later that night under a quarter moon they outshot the Starlight Scope at the 300 meter range. They were amazed. I wasn't...I own a few Shepherds and I know what they can do..."

— MSG DELMONT USAR (RET)
MARKSMANSHIP INSTRUCTOR

SHEPHERD'S EASY ONE SHOT ZERO!

"I have been using one of the first Shepherd DRS scopes since early 1983, and a late model for some months. It is impressive, to say the least. Unlike other Range finding & Bullet drop systems, Shepherd DOES NOT REQUIRE THE USE OF THREE HANDS. IT'S FAST AND DEADLY", BOB BELL in Gun Digest. Author of Gun Digest book of SCOPES & MOUNTS

WHAT ABOUT ACCURACY???

"As for accuracy, the scope's 600 yard range finding circle produced a three shot 3.75 inch group two inches above dead center at 600 yards. The 1,000 yard circle at 1,000 yards put all shots in the black with an average elevation error of 3.33 inches. I did much more experimental shooting at various ranges (nearly 450 rounds), and my personal BOTTOM LINE IS that this Shepherd P1 Scope is staying right where it is, on top of my Remington 700-P rifle!"

NOTE FROM DAN SHEPHERD:
Our new 6x18x40 VARMINT/TARGET SCOPE WON TWO NATIONAL NRA TARGET MATCHES IN 2001.

"Darned if I didn't bowl prairie dogs over at 250 yards, and some of these barely quivered after being hit. One things for certain, I never missed by much - even at 250 yards with that rimfire. Without the Shepherd Scope, however, I don't think I'd ever have been able to come so close," Nick Sisley, in Magnum Guns & Shooting 1986.

GEISSELE[®]

AUTOMATICS

Quality Triggers for the Warfighter and Competitor

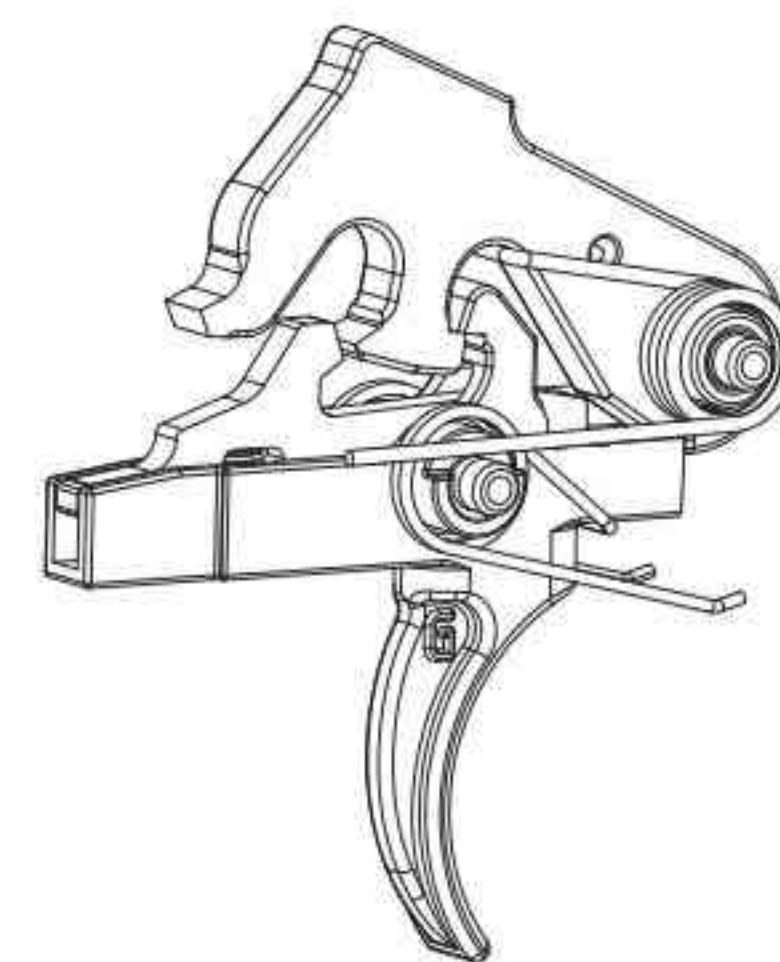

SSF[®]

The Geissele Super Select-Fire (SSF) trigger select-fire combat is a trigger that Geissele Automatics has developed for the U.S. Special Operations community. In semi-automatic mode, the SSF performs like a match-grade, two-stage trigger that allows precise and accurate trigger control. In fully-automatic mode, the SSF performs like a precision single-stage trigger with a smooth trigger pull and a crisp hammer release.

During times like these, we're all looking to get the most value from every dollar we spend. Fortunately, value is standard equipment with every Hi-Point purchase.

No matter what environment or condition you find yourself in, there's no comparison to Hi-Point firearms for rugged and reliable service.

Whether you're a varmint hunter, plinker or target shooter, no one else delivers so much solid, reliable performance, for so little.

Maybe we are bragging, but we truly believe that hands-down, Hi-Point is America's Best Firearm Value.

DYER CARTRIDGE BOX

Gen. Alexander Dyer's (Chief of Ordnance, 1864-74) cartridge box filled the requirements for a cartridge box that would allow for quick and easy access to the .45 cal. revolver cartridge used in the Colt S.A. revolvers during the last quarter of the 19th century. The boxes have fleece lining to protect the loose ammo from knocking about. Original Dyer boxes are now extremely rare, expensive and fragile. Our replica is an absolute dead ringer in all respects. Brown or Black leather with US embossed.

A rare find! APEX gun parts has Spanish Cetme-L parts kits available for your next build! Call for a unique build and an awesome piece of history. This rifle was developed by the Spanish company CETME (now Santa Barbara SA) as an improvement over the previous CETME-C. Production began in 1984 and was adopted by the Spanish army before being replaced by the H&K G36E. This rifle was designed to accept standard "M16" style magazines.

"A strong body makes the mind strong. As to the species of exercises, I advise the gun. While this gives moderate exercise to the body, it gives boldness, enterprise and independence to the mind. Games played with the ball, and others of that nature, are too violent for the body and stamp no character on the mind. Let your gun, therefore, be the constant companion of your walks." Thomas Jefferson to Peter Carr, 1785, The Papers of Thomas Jefferson 8:407 (Julian P. Boyd, ed., 1950).

GEW 1888 COMMISSION RIFLE
"BARRELED ACTIONS"

NO FFL REQUIRED

8mm

A medium sized lot of these 1888 commission rifles or GEW 88s, as they are known, have been discovered far in the old warehouse. They are mostly complete with some wood attached with the exception that they are missing bolts. The few that were cleaned up seemed to even reveal quite nice bores!

GAHENDRA MARTINI 577/.450 RIFLE KITS

The Gahendra rifle with their gracefully curved cocking levers and clever (as well as strong) locking mechanism are a unique example of a single shot main battle weapon of a by-gone era of warfare. Hailing from Monarchical Nepal and wielded by the infamously fierce Gurkha warriors have a romantic history indeed! Everything you need such as a complete barreled action, handsome wood set and all of the appropriate bands are included so that you, with a little of that "midnight oil", can build a truly worthy addition to any collection.

Supply limited. Yours only $374.88*VZ- 58 MAG SET WITH CARRYING CASE

HIGH QUALITY GERMAN MILITARY FLARE PISTOL

Geco 26.5mm all steel flare pistol. Made in Germany and imported into the US in fairly limited quantities. Today they are nearly impossible to find. The Geco is the highest quality, strongest and most interesting of all of these type pistols brought to US during the last 20 years and recently rediscovered in the mine by Old Zeke. Each 1960s vintage kit contains one Geco LP2 flare pistol in very good to excellent condition, one waterproof vinyl holster with shoulder strap, and one folding flare case with shoulder strap. Each water resistant case measures approximately 7.5" wide by 7.5" long by 1.5" thick and securely holds a dozen 26.5mm flares. This flare pistol is extremely sought after by collectors and is the highest quality military issue flare pistol produced. Featuring a 6" blued steel barrel is chambered in the common 26.5mm round. All parts of the flare pistol are made of steel except for the two brown Bakelite grips. In very good to excellent condition and is fully operational. Supply limited. Only $324.88

"ON every question of construction (of the Constitution, let us) carry ourselves back to the time when the Constitution was adopted, recollect the spirit manifested in the debates, and instead of trying what meaning may be squeezed out of the text, or invented against it, conform to the probable one which it was passed." Thomas Jefferson, letter to William Johnson, June 12, 1823, John P. Foley, ed., The Jefferson Cyclopedica (New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1900), 844.

"The corollary, from the first position, is, that the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed. The prohibition is general. No clause in the Constitution could by any rule of construction be conceived to give to congress a power to disarm the people. Such a flagitious attempt could only be made under some general pretense by a state legislature. But if in any blind pursuit of inordinate power, either should attempt it, this amendment may be appealed to as a restraint on both...." William Rawle, A View of the Constitution (1829).

"False is the idea of utility that sacrifices a thousand real advantages for one imaginary or trifling inconvenience; that would take fire from men because it burns, and water because one may drown in it; that has no remedy for evils, except destruction. The laws that forbid the carrying of arms are laws of such a nature. They disarm only those who are neither inclined nor determined to commit crimes. Can it be supposed that those who have the courage to violate the most sacred laws of humanity, the most important of the code, will respect the less important and arbitrary ones, which can be violated with ease and impunity, and which, if strictly obeyed, would put an end to personal liberty-so dear to men, so dear to the enlightened legislator-and subject innocent persons to all the vexations that the guilty alone ought to suffer? Such laws make things worse for the assaulted and better for the assailants; they serve rather to encourage than to prevent homicides, for an unarmed man may be attacked with greater confidence than an armed man. They ought to be designated as laws not preventive but fearful of crimes, produced by the tumultuous impression of a few isolated facts, and not by thoughtful consideration of the inconveniences and advantages of a universal decree." Cesare Beccaria, father of modern criminology, 1764.

"That the people have a right to bear arms for the defence of themselves and their own state, or the United States, or for the purpose of killing game; and no law shall be passed for disarming the people or any of them, unless for crimes committed, or real danger of public injury from individuals...." What the Founders Really Said About Guns

Original Intent

What the Founders Really Said About Guns

By Clayton E. Cramer

Noted author Clayton E. Cramer has collected, verified, and added new historical quotes that reveal the Framers of our Constitution intent of the Second Amendment. Again and again, FIREARMS NEWS has been asked for copies of the historical quotes that have been used for many years as fillers in the classified section. It became clear that readers were using these as a source for writing letters to the editor, to their congressional representatives, etc.

Milazzo-Krieger M-K II

The reintroduction of the original
Milazzo-Krieger M-K II Two Stage Match
Trigger System for the AR15 / M16 family of rifles and pistols.

The first patented Two-Stage Match trigger system for the AR platform. Small and Large pin models are available. Used by the USAMU to set multiple records. All new production using the original tooling and fixtures. All parts are hand inspected.

(Installation by a factory trained gunsmith is available)

MSRP:
$265.95

NEW! Model M-K IIA2

INTRODUCING THE NEW M-K IIA2 GEN2 TACTICAL TRIGGER!

- This is the next generation of M-K II
- Factory set over travel
- Quick installation and tuning
- Redesigned disconnecter
- Available in Small pin (GI Type) and Large pin Colt Styles
- Short hammer reset
- Adjustable second stage release
- Forward trigger over travel

The new M-K IIA2 was designed with Tactical shooting in mind.

This trigger system combines the world class match trigger release of the original M-K II with a high speed tactical trigger. We use the trigger and hammer castings of the original M-K II without changing any of the hook angles or trigger geometry. This way you get the same pull and release of the M-K II. Then we add a redesigned disconnecter to give the M-K IIA2 a fast hammer reset. The forward trigger over travel allows the trigger to move forward after the hammer has reset. This will keep trigger spring pressure on your finger which will greatly reduce trigger slapping when high speed follow up shots are required.

- The key to the unequaled smoothness and release is precision. We hold extremely tight tolerances. We only use the best of the best.
- All of our out of house contractors are the top of their field.
- We start with castings made from the original molds by the aerospace division of the foundry that cast the first M-K II.
- Our trigger housings are machined on machines that produce guided missile parts.
- Our hammers are ground on surface grinders that can cut to within microns.
- Our pins and sleeves are made using the newest Swiss style machining on the latest state of the art machines.

Each component of our trigger system is inspected and hand assembled. Then the assembled unit is tested on our mockup jigs for smoothness and safety engagement. Once the parts come together in our shop, each trigger system has been inspected, tested and assembled using over 30 precision made fixtures.

The end result is the incredible M-K II and now the M-K IIA2 GEN2 tactical trigger.

"A people who mean to continue free must be prepared to meet danger in person, not to rely upon the fallacious protection of mercenary armies." Rep. Randolph, debating in Congress the merits of militias vs. standing armies, January 5, 1800.

"(T)o preserve liberty, it is essential that the whole body of the people always possess arms, and be taught alike, especially when young, how to use them...." Richard Henry Lee, January 25, 1788, in Letters from the Federal Farmer to the Republican, 18.

"The laws that forbid the carrying of arms...disarm only those who are neither inclined nor determined to commit crimes...Such laws make things worse for the assaulted and better for the assailants; they serve rather to encourage than to prevent homicides, for an unarmed man may be attacked with greater confidence than an armed man." Cesare Beccaria, father of modern criminology, 1764.

Is it possible, he asked, that an army could be raised for the purpose of enslaving themselves and their brethren? or, if raised, whether they could subdue a nation of freemen, who know how to prize liberty, and who have arms in their hands? T. Sedgwick, Massachusetts Ratification Convention, 1788.

"The corollary, from the first position, is, that the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed. The prohibition is general. No clause in the Constitution could by any rule of construction be conceived to give to congress a power to disarm the people. Such a flagitious attempt could only be made under some general pretense by a state legislature. But if in any blind pursuit of inordinate power, either should attempt it, this amendment may be appealed to as a restraint on both...." William Rawle, A View of the Constitution (1829).
